The Improper Bostonian

There's a revolution brewing in Boston. But this time the battles won't be fought on picturesque Lexington Green or the commanding hills of Charlestown. They will take place right in the heart of the city.

The victims will be staid, sluggish publications that have failed to keep pace with the changing demands of today's consumers. And the victors will be businesses, like yours, that recognize the potential for an easy-reading, comprehensive leisure and entertainment newspaper targeted at the difficult to reach 18 to 35 year old buying group.

Introducing The Improper Bostonian, Boston's bi-weekly leisure and entertainment newspaper ....

Who are we?

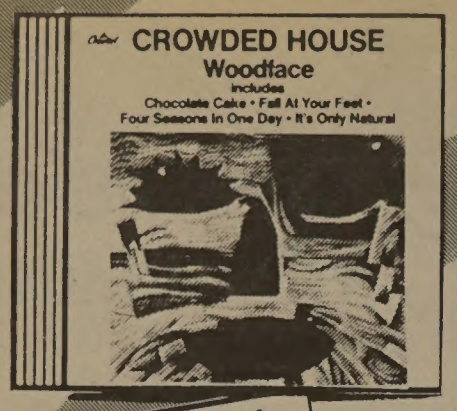
The Improper Bostonian is a bi-weekly leisure and entertainment newspaper with a circulation of 80,000.

Who are our readers?

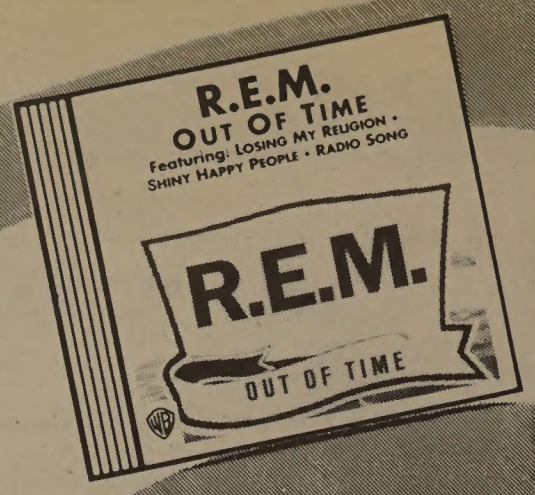
The oft-neglected 18 to 35 post-Baby Boom generation.

What makes us different?

The Improper Bostonian offers the most comprehensive, user-friendly leisure and entertainment listings in the city - in addition to some of the most lively feature articles you'll find anywhere.



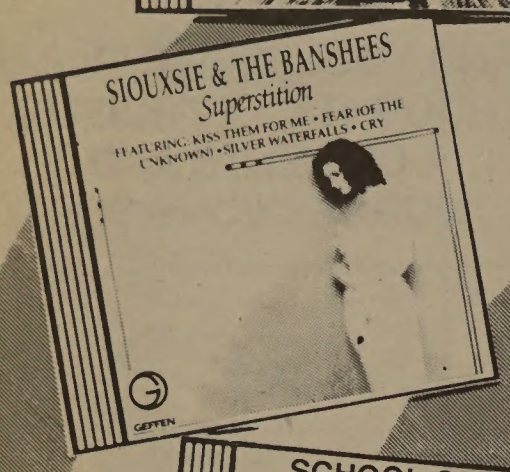
Our staff is bold, aggressive - and above all talented. While the recession has been chipping away at your sales, it has afforded us the opportunity to chose from the most talented pool of journalists this city has seen in decades. Our newsroom is a hub of activity, bustling with eager staff members ready to go the extra mile.



Where can your customers find us in the future?

Readers can pick us up free at any one of our strategically placed, free-standing newsracks. Copies will also be available at such non-traditional sites as schools, hotels, museums, adult education centers, restaurants, nightclubs, record stores, hair salons, health clubs, and tourist centers.

You may want us to leave a stack of papers at your place of business. The additional foot traffic could translate into significant new sales.



The Improper Bostonian, grow with us .... we're fresh, bold and innovative.

Gypsy Kings at The Channel, July 23 Rachel Power

The Gypsy Kings, a ten-member acoustic guitar group, whose hot-gets-into-your-blood combination latin-flamenco-gypsy sound has earned them top-ten hits and sold millions of albums internationally, appeared at The Channel Tuesday, July 23. Los Reyes, who consistently sell out stadium shows in Europe, were greeted in Boston by 1,500 wildly appreciative fans who salsa'd with abandon and clapped enthusiastically along with every 'impasionado' number. This two-hour show was probably the hottest musical event to hit Boston in years. Don't miss them next time!

The Pleasures of Paris: Daumier to Picasso is currently on view at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston and runs through September 1. From the ballet and dancing at the Bougivale, to the racecourse at Longchamps and all the theater, circus, cafés and bars-in between, artists such as Renoir, Cassatt, Sargent, Picasso and Dégas captured in their work the gaiety of Parisian culture and recreation that flourished during the late nineteenth century. The program is sponsored by IBM. Call (617) 267-9300 for information.

The Blue Cross Blue Shield U.S. Pro Tennis Championships at the Longwood Cricket Club in Chestnut Hill started Monday, July 29 at noon and ran through Sunday, August 4. The talented Andres Gomez, prevail over a fieldthat included Andrei Cherkasov, and Richey Reneberg.

Gems runs through October 27 at the Museum of Science, Boston. Rarely seen priceless baubles worn by the Duchess of Windsor,and the world's largest rhinestone, owned by Liberace (115,000 carats) are on display, along with a $40 million, 900-item array of gems. Some of these jewls were once owned by Russian Czars, Egyptian Pharaohs and European Emperors. Don't miss this glittering collection. Call (617) 523-6664 for hours and admission prices.

Wegman's "In the Box" at the Institute of Contemporary Art through October 6

The Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston will exhibit a collection of nearly 200 William Wegman paintings, drawings, photographs and videotapes beginning August 7, continuing through October 6. This is the U.S. premiere of this Massachusetts College of Art graduate's show which has toured extensively throughout Europe. Wegman is probably best known for his offbeat and humorous 20" x 24" Polaroid photographs of his dogs, Weimarans. But this show, although including the Weimarans is also a good introduction to some of Wegman's important works using other mediums. Call (617) 266-5151 for info.

Walt Willey, who plays the sexy lawyer Jackson Montgomery, not to mention Erica Kane's (Susan Lucci) main love interest on ABC's All My Children, made his Boston-area debut at Nick's Comedy Stop, 100 Warrenton Street Saturday, July 27. Willey's no dumb blond; this major hunk of a soap star writes his own stand-up material, draws and paints, has his own line of humorous greeting cards, and even has a comic strip to his credit.

Why the Birds Sing

Who would ante up 185 bucks, trek out to Northampton (that's north of Springfield for you provincials), kick the dirt for two-and-one-half hours - all the while under extreme duress - just for a 40-second thrill ride? I did and would highly recommend that you do the same.

By Dan Silver

The author and the instructor flying high over Northampton

Skydiving. The very word conjures up vivid images for most people. You have probably already heard the cliches: flying without a plane, riding the grill of a train, cliff diving at 8,000 feet. Rather than add to the list, I offer this photograph. That ear-to-ear grin isn't for the camera. It's genuine. And it hasn't left my face in the week or so since my pilgrimage to Northampton Airport for a day of restless pacing, schoolboy camaraderie, and of course, screaming exhilaration.

The sport of skydiving actually originated in New England. In the early years, jumpers used surplus military equipment and trained according to military methods. Technological advances over the past five years have dramatically changed all that. Today first-time jumpers have three methods to chose from: static line, tandem and accelerated freefall (see box). They use highly maneuverable square chutes, which have replaced the round bombers of the past. And more often than not, they land standing - as opposed to the old military hit-and-roll landing.

Airborne Adventures in Northampton pioneered the tandem method of instruction. Every weekend as many as 40 students take the plunge along with their instructors, to whom they are attached by means of a specially designed harness and 10,000 lb cargo clips. Sounds scary, but fear not. They've performed this technique over 4,900 times at Airborne Adventures without a single injury - of any kind.

A typical day of skydiving involves a lot of waiting. After a restless night and a long drive to the dropsite, most first-timers are ready to hit the skies the moment they arrive. Standing in stark contrast to these nervous novices are the old-hands, who drink coffee and laugh heartily as they exchange war stories - sometimes for hours. As the clock ticks and the anticipation grows, one of the first-timers will inevitably approach the group of veterans and ask for a status report. "Dancing winds" is the prognosis - whatever that means. "Relax. We'll get you up there before you know it." More waiting. . .

"Just as shock begins setting in, somebody unexpectedly taps you on the shoulder and murmers something about suiting up. Holy. . . Here we go."

You would think that seeing others go before you would be therapeutic. But there's nothing comforting in standing on the ground watching bodies fall - seemingly uncontrollably - from a dot of a plane 8,000 feet above. Just as shock begins setting in, somebody unexpectedly taps you on the shoulder and murmers something about suiting up. Holy. . . Here we go.

Suiting up is an art. You're at about the peak of your anxiety and some instructor has to put you in a plane and jump out with you. How is it done? Entirely through strength of personality. In fact, the whole suiting up process is a psychological game. Before you have a chance to mutter an objection, some guy has just finished zipping up your jump suit and is pushing your leg through a harness. As you begin to speak, he turns you around and starts tightening a series of straps. All communication is made through body language. You get the sense that this guy's been here before, and if you do what he says, everything will be fine.

Finally, the silence is broken with a few words about the exit. "Hips forward. Shoulders back. Strong arch." And the next thing you know, you're sitting on your instructor's lap staring at five unfamiliar faces in a plane not much larger than a Volkswagon Beetle. As the plane rises, the more experienced passengers in the group laugh and smile. The beginners stare at the hori-

Dan learns about how to exit the plane

Three First-Jump Courses

There are three first-jump techniques currently in use: static line, tandem, and accelerated freefall.

Static Line: This is the oldest and least expensive method (about $150). It does not offer the excitement of a freefall; instead the chute opens automatically within seconds of exiting by means of a line running between the plane and the jumper's ripcord. First-time jumps require about six hours of ground instruction, and they are taken alone, which contributes to a slightly higher injury rate.

Tandem: This is the method described above. First jumps cost about $185. Ground instruction is minimal. First-time freefalls last about 30 seconds. Injury rates are remarkably low.

Accelerated Freefall (AFF): This is the most expensive method costing about $300, it requires the most ground instruction (6 to 10 hours). The advantage of AFF is that first-time freefalls are taken solo, with two instructors in attendance for safety. First-time freefalls last 30-40 seconds. Injury rates are comparable to tandem.

For More Information Call:

Airborne Adventures, Northampton, MA: (413) 665-7577. (Tandem)
Massachusetts Sport Parachute Club, Turner's Falls, MA: (413) 863-8362. (Static line and AFF)
New England Adventures, South Lebanon, NH: (617) 969-4050 or (207) 339-1520. (Static line, tandem and AFF)

zon, the droning engine lulling them into a false sense of security.

"Let's go!" shouts one of the old-timers with a mischievous grin. Suddenly the hatch is opened, exposing the ground some 8,000 feet below. The rush of wind alerts you to the inevitability of your mission. Your body goes onto auto pilot. "Hitch up. Further! Hands on your belt buckle. Eyes straight ahead! Strong arch!" Your body is dangling in the wind now - almost entirely out of the plane. The instructor to whom you are attached is seated at the edge of the plane - half in, half out. "Here we go. . ."

The Freefall

Wooosh! Your first view is of the bottom of the plane as it whisks away. Your senses are so overwhelmed that it takes a moment to get oriented. Then suddenly it hits you. You're flying!

The whistling of the wind is deafening, but you try to scream for joy just the same. Nothing comes out. . . Whahoo! This is it. . . Freefalling at 120 mph. The ground seems so distant that you don't realize you're actually falling at a rate of about 150 feet per second. Who cares anyway. This is it. . . Freefalling at 120 mph.

Just as you're beginning to feel comfortable, the freefall comes to an end. You feel a brisk tug, hear the flapping of nylon in the wind and then silence. Complete, utter silence. You look up and see a brilliantly colored canopy extended overhead. "How was that?" your instructor questions. "Huh? Oh. Amazing! Incredible! Whahooooo!" Finally you can hear yourself speak. You want to put your feelings to words but can't. Eventually you accept the futility of speech. Nonetheless, one word keeps churning in your head, over and over. "Wow...! Wow...! Wow...!" How foolish, you think.

The four or five minutes it takes to reach the ground are some of the most peaceful you'll ever experience. The view is . . .well, incredible - a complete panorama - without obstruction - from 3,000 feet. Crystal clear. Vibrant. Otherworldly.

You receive a few last minute instructions as you approach the ground. "Knees high. Look straight ahead. Get 'em higher! Good. Now look straight ahead." You feel a soft jolt underfoot. You stumble. Maybe you slide a bit on the soles of your feet. And then you're up. Beaming. Laughing. Looking for someone to relate your experience to. You catch a few knowing glances from the old-guard. That's enough.

Now it's time to start the long drive home.

The Players

Who would do this for a living? Dave Strictland for one. Dave is the president of Airborne Adventures. He's been jumping for over 15 years and has accumulated 5,000 plus jumps. It probably wouldn't surprise you to hear that Dave is a licensed private investigator, but what if I told you he is also an ordained minister. I know I felt better.

Dave's wife, Chapin, is Airborne Adventures' top photographer. For $40 she'll take to the skies and do in-flight pictures of you. She's got over 1,500 jumps. A petite woman, Chapin's not strong enough for the day-to-day rigors of tandem jumping. But that doesn't bother her. "People ask me if I ever get sick of jumping sometimes 10 or 15 times a day, and I tell them that every time I move in for a picture I see the biggest smile in the world beaming back at me. I can honestly say everyone loves it, and you can't beat that for a day's living."

The other instructors at Airborne Adventures have similar credentials. Dave Churchill, an instructor with over 2,000 jumps, keeps coming back because of the "casual people" he meets. "We've got doctors and garbage collectors, but we're all the same up here." He adds with a wink, "Shoot, I'm a mortician." Happily, skydiving hasn't helped business any.

The Improper Tourist

by Greg Sarkisian

Welcome to Boston, America's most historic city. Walk streets that haven't changed since the 19th century. Drink Boston lager from bar stools that once supported America's most famous backsides. Sit and meditate at the graves of people who lost their lives defending the American Way.

Any tour of historic Boston should begin on the Freedom Trail. The Trail connects many of the most significant historical sites in Boston. In fact, it runs through what is arguably the most historic square mile in the United States - downtown Boston. Begin at the Common (America's oldest public park) and continue past Granary Burial Ground (resting place of Paul Revere , Samuel Adams, John Hancock and Mother Goose), Old South Meeting House (departure point for the Sons of Liberty on the night of the Boston Tea Party), Old North Church (where two lanterns were hung on April 18, 1775 to signify that the British were coming "by sea"), Faneuil Hall, the USS Constitution (the world's oldest commissioned battle ship, more commonly known as "Old Ironsides") and Bunker Hill Monument. For more information on the Freedom Trail and other National Parks in and around Boston, call the National Park Service at 242-5642 or visit their office at the corner of Devonshire and State Sts.

If you've still got time left over after walking the trail, you can begin to make a dent in Boston's wealth of museums. The Museum of Fine Arts (465 Huntington Ave., 267-9300) boasts one of the largest collections in the world. Travel from Ancient Egypt to Renaissance Europe in the matter of a day. The Museum of Science (O'Brien Highway just off Storrow Dr., 723-2500) features exhibits on everything from outer space to molecular biology. Also see the Hayden Planetarium and the Mugar Omni Theater, featuring wrap-around cinematography (call 723-2500 for times and ticket info). The New England Aquarium (Central Wharf, 973-5200) houses a four-story glass fish tank, complete with a coral reef and live sharks.

If you're looking for something different, try one of Boston's lesser-known but equally fascinating, smaller museums. The Computer Museum (300 Congress St., 426-2800) will thrust you into the computer age while the Children's Museum (also 300 Congress St., 426-6500) will entertain both the children and adults in your group. Harvard University's Sackler (485 Broadway, Camb., 495-9400) and Fogg (32 Quincy St., Camb., 495-9400) Art Museums display outstanding ancient collections. The John F. Kennedy Library (Columbia Point, 929-4523) offers a beautiful view of the harbor as well as interesting exhibits about Brookline's favorite son.

Now, if all this touring has left you hungry, take a meal where Daniel Webster, Calvin Coolidge and John Kennedy once ate. I'm referring to the Union Oyster House (45 Union St.) and Durgin Park (340 North Mkt., Faneuil Hall Mktpl.) - both on the Freedom Trail. These restaurants were serving good food and drink when Abraham Lincoln was still a small-time lawyer in Illinois.

As you've probably heard, getting around Boston by car is no easy task. But fortunately one of the city's other great assets is its comprehensive transportation system: the T. Did you know that the T offers all-you-can-ride tourist passes good for three and eight days? Call 722-5218 for more information. And remember, all sites mentioned in this section are accessible by the T.

FENWAY PARK SEATING DIAGRAM

Davis Square and a Deadline

JASON GREGORICUS

My Boss: When can you have an article in to me?
Me: I can start tonight.
My Boss: Good. Have it on my desk at 9 am.
Me: You got it! (we hang up.)
Me: Damn!
Objective: To write an article of decent length about the leisure scene in Boston, in less than 12 hours, with absolutely no money in my pocket.

On this late afternoon, while nursing a $43,000 bottle of Orangina, I have counted two Volvos, several malnourished Bon-Jovi wannabees, three Hippies with briefcases, four aging men in spandex, three Harleys, one nose ring, twelve serious men in European suits, innumerable women in wayfarers, six plodding dogs replete with gelatinous drool and one maniac three-year-old who has periodically assaulted me with a hat for the past fifteen minutes. This is what you do when you're looking for writing material. You go someplace near, suffer some abuse and write about what you see.

I like Davis Square. It lacks everything. It lacks the young punkers with Buicks pierced through their skulls. It lacks the uncombed street performer who can swallow his own leg. It lacks the voracious wall of cars swelling towards you like a Prussian army. It lacks (in my opinion) a decent slice of pizza. And, sadly, it even lacks a pungent bookstore. But if you want the thrill of Harvard Square - the buzzing sea of society, from the pompous to the perverse (as I often do) - well, go to Harvard Square. For this writer Davis gives all the fanfare of its Red Line cousin while still offering a place to bang your brains for writing material.

As a summer scene, Davis looks more like a neighborhood than a concrete-and-brick urban renewal project; oftentimes I half expect a Shriner's parade to come barrelling down the street. But yet it's a good place for a hack like me (or anyone else for that matter) to read under its ethnic reach-out-and-touch-someone veneer to the smokey, something-is-going-on-near-by interior. For example:

Across the street, in an apartment window above the hairdresser's, a huge man has been staring at me and chewing something for the past three hours. (It's hard to meet a deadline when you can hear a person chewing 90 feet away.)

Right in front of the hairdressers, a Gabe Kaplan look-alike has been pacing back and forth, intermittently kicking a wall, all the while maintaining a vicious argument with his hand.

And at the table next to me, a clean-cut kid, probably 12 years old, wearing a Sox cap and a "Surf-Rad" T-shirt says to his friend, "Yo bubba, yawannacuppacauffey?"

O.K. Tracy Chapman crooning modern urban depression songs at the Coop it isn't. But, so what? The curious thing about Davis is that the whole of its charm comes from being what it tries to be, rather than what it is. What it tries to be, well, is Harvard Square. What it is, ironically enough, is a Harvard Square that charmingly fails.

In the films-you-would-never-normally-get-to-see Somerville Theatre your shoes stick to the floor, the movies play with the the reel clicking audibly behind you and the ticket man is at once the usher, concession worker and the janitor. (Take that Harvard.) In the alternative music bar, everybody seems depressed, the music is almost always beautifully second-rate and half the male patrons sound suspiciously like Tom Waits. In the sports trough for the beer drinking ex-jocks, the Reagan-era happy ones gather, watch seven screens at once, and still mourn the loss of such men as Danny Ainge, Lee Smith and Ed King. In the obligatory pasta joints you find, well, lots of fat people. And what's most important, Davis Square has the original, and almost historic Steve's Ice Cream (which is sadly owned now by a big corporate conglomerate which doesn't give two scoops about Mr. Herrell, or his homemade ice cream). Like Harvard Square, Davis Square can offer a few shabbily dressed radicals plotting insurrection too. But they'd choose going to Radio Shack and buying digital alarm clocks over slouching on stairs and spitting on the news agents' wall.

What, you may ask, is the purpose of this rambling? Well, to be honest, I'm not sure. This is a limited sampling of good ole Davis Square, but my first day of work is tomorrow and I have to hand something in. Well the day is winding down now. Perhaps with my first paycheck I'll actually be able to go somewhere. Until then keep reading, I guess. But I'd better wrap up the monologue . . . So the moral of the story is this: keep your Harvard Square, keep your evangelists from the Christ Church of Refrigeration, keep your two dollar cup of tea. For a few days out of the week, give me ten bucks and a pad of paper; I'll find plenty to entertain me. And if you're in the area, I'll be the one with the pen in his teeth - right near the hairdressers - banging his head on the table. Sit down and have a chat, if you're lucky you too will catch the Incredible Chewing Man.

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN GUIDE TO LOCAL FESTIVALS

compiled by Tamara Fort

A Gargoyle for Any Occasion

by Rey Roldan

Ever get the feeling you're being watched? . . . that eyes are following your every move, leering from behind every nook? Do you get the willies just thinking about the little creatures that could be hiding around the next corner?. When you turn around, do demons disappear into the woodwork or behind leafcluttered gutters? Exorcise those paranoias! Seek counseling! Or better yet, take a stroll through The Greenman, Gargoyles, Grotesques, and Chimeras and discover what nightmares are really made of. Hidden in a Newbury Street brownstone between Fairfield and Gloucester, this bizarre gallery/store is home to hundreds of plaster and fiberglass reproductions of gargoyles commonly found on Gothic buildings throughout Europe.

Who is the Greenman and what are gargoyles? Christie Coker, tour guide and co-creator of this home for wayward spirits, explained that the Greenman is a mystical god of the forest found in the art of cultures as diverse as ancient Polynesia and Rome and Celtic Ireland. Many modern Earth Day celebrations still feature a Greenman. "He's a symbol of compassion and rebirth, of man and nature working in unison."

Gargoyles, which are similar to grotesques and chimeras, are architectural features usually found adorning gutterspouts or cathedral facades. Some bear warnings against vices like greed and vanity. All carry some message or lesson of faith. "Each of these gargoyles has a story and origin of its own," said Coker. "For example, we have a gargoyle from Notre Dame depicted eating a lazy monk. It warns other monks against laziness."

Here, however, these architectural ornamentations have become majestic works of art. According to Coker, "No one really knows why people like them. They have universal appeal. They are such fantastic creatures that they strike people's imaginations."

The Medieval charm of The Greenman is punctuated by the leaves that clutter the floor and table displays. "The inspiration for the leaves was the European public park," explained co-creator Louis Gordon. "They are places that people don't go very often. There's a sense of solitude in the leaves (of the parks)." Gordon continued, "I love leaves. I love to see the centuries accumulated through leaves."

Rachel Power

The artworks at The Greenman are a motley assemblage of sinister monsters, dragons and other beasts of the Medieval imagination. Some fit comfortably in the palm of your hand while others need more space to breathe. Prices range from $5 for an imp-sized skull to well over $100 for an imperial gryphon (a half-eagle, half-lion monster). You won't find any price tags at The Greenman, however. "To stick a price tag on a work of art is degrading," explains Coker. "It's more fun to just walk through and appreciate them."

So whether you're a student of architecture, a purveyor of obscure arts or a curious passer-by, you will be enchanted and mystified by The Greenman, Gargoyles, Grotesques, and Chimeras. Careful walking by. You may find yourself subconsciously drawn in by the warm gaze of ancient eyes. Succumb to those fantastical instincts and bask in the creative spirit. Who knows, you may even adopt one.

THE GREAT GATSBY, WHO?

By Erica Weingart

There are imposters and then there are imposters. Spies, the spied upon, and double-agents. Kings, queens and pawns. The Gatsby Ball, a charity-benefit initiated 14 years ago by a group of intimate New England women out to celebrate Fitzgerald's commentaries on the Newport elite society, possessed all kinds: creatures of sublime comfort, whispering wannabees and others striking a well-worn pose.

Held at Lady Astor's Beechwood mansion, a Georgian estate of grand proportion snugly nestled among Newport's exclusive homes whose backs are carefully contrived to sweep up sea-breezes from the Atlantic Ocean, the outrageous party attracted an eclectic mix of mayors, manicurists, prep-school junkies, Parisian party-hoppers, attorneys, bonds-tradesmen, debutantes, fashion felons and the truly affluent, all clad in the spirit of an era forever gone: the Jazz age.

The trip from Boston to Newport was an adventure I was not fully equipped to digest. A beautiful and grotesque journey sparked off by the trail of Mercedes, BMW's, Jaguars and Saabs, heading off the Interstate towards the Jamestown bridge, where weeping marshlands bow to neatly trimmed lawns, homes with huge wrap-around porches and widow's walks.

Streets singing names of "West Wind" and "Conanicos Ave." ushered us past rusted-out windmills, poodles with pink bows and ladies gossiping under the timeless canopies of old-money houses, toward Ms. Madeline Piers' home for pre-party patois. Piers, who is the founder and sole-proprietor of the ball, provided ample space for the limousines, Rolls Royces, vintage DeSotos and Bentleys rolling into the circular driveway, and onto her lawn.

At the ball, chauffeurs clad in formal tails and bow-ties opened doors for flappers, golf-pros and clandestine couples stepping out for the semi-invitation only party, who shelled out $85 for a ticket and a fleeting affair with status, notoriety and the Duke-Balair Orchestra.

The 16-piece orchestra blasted out swing music for the nearly 700 people entering and leaving the stately ballroom bound either for the lawn adjacent to the sea, or back inside to mingle with guests guzzling champagne, brandishing 20's-style cigarette holders and flashing beaded headpieces which capped off low-cut dresses.

Rumors that the ball is a fading art spread like an oil fire, as guests wantonly commented that last year's crowd boasted nearly 2,000 attendants, and last year's tickets were being scalped on Newport beaches as the real McCoy. And the ironies mounted.

Don and Rob White, guests from New York, said they were invited by "someone" who originally started the ball. Not sure of exactly whom, they seemed at odds with Fitzgerald's name-dropping characters, and felt the details of his life were tiresome. Don, a woman dressed to the T, pointed to Rob, saying, "He's the one that reads." Rob, in turn added, "Which Fitzgerald? Oh, Scott. Wasn't that required high school reading?"

Kurt Larson, a woodworker, artist and Illinois-native who collected tickets at the ball noted: "Word around Newport on the scene is that the ball is a has been. No one wants to tell Madeline before the ball," he said. Kurt added that the preservation societies, bird sanctuaries and fire departments slated to receive money from the ball are not exactly politically correct. "I think they could give the money to a better charity, rather than giving it to people who don't really need it," Larson said. He added that the ball, rather than imitating life, condescends to the art which gave it form. "It's been done! It's been done! It's been done!" he said.

Strangely at odds with the good intentions of the the Gatsby mistresses, who profess to contribute to the Martin Luther King Center, was a ghostly absence of African-Americans (out of 700 guests, a person could count the number on one hand, with fingers to spare). But all this was in good fun, even if it was not necessarily all in good taste.

Hilarious comments flourished under the crescent moon as patrons confused Fitzgerald's exquisite description of the rich with their own lives. One chauffeur, of a Bentley, who preferred not to be named, said, "The women like to come because they want to hook up with nice men. They want to scoop the Big Tuna. Many of them seem like they have a lot of money, but only about a third really do".

Pamela Rose, from Middletown, who owns a manicuring businesses, said she hears "a lot" of gossip. "You might say I'm like a historian." But recreating history is risky, as nostalgia becomes a tour de force, absent of conscience. One DeSoto driver, wiping fingerprints off the exterior of the car, said, "We embellish history, making it so much more than it was."

Two young women, bound for the ball in slinky black cocktail dresses, gave a Miss USA salute from a Mercedes convertible to a society they felt deserved uncensored regard. "Wave like a Deb," they screamed.

Noreen and Edward Dark stood at the tables of clams on the half-shell, counting the charities and prestigious events they attend yearly. Brought up in the fashion business, they won an award as a flapper-gangster duo, fondling British cigarettes and clichés like true Gatsby characters. "We give to the Preservation Society, the Boys Club and the South Boston Vietnam Memorial Association," said Noreen. Pointing to her husbands clothing and waving a feather-bound fan, she said, "His hat has Brooks Brothers' labels, and I usually wear Bob Mackie outfits from London." "This fan is made in New York, and comes in all colors. . .. we've been written up in all of the society pages, and Bill Cunningham, from the New York Times, is very nice. He does all our write-ups - Oh, Eddie, keep eating the shrimps!"

Madeline Piers, founder of the ball, called it a "grass-roots kind of thing." "My hope is that it gets better and better every year," she said, telling the story of the mansion's princess, Lady Astor, who started the "fabulous 400" parties, where only the crème de la crème of society gathered in exclusive agreement.

As Glen Miller and Duke Ellington blared out of trombones and trumpets, people drank up the atmosphere and genuinely had a fabulous time, but Fitzgerald fans were hard to find, and many were hard-pressed to understand the era he both eloquently described and detailed in stunning accuracy. Sienna Izzo, from Johnston, Rhode Island said she didn't have enough room in her date-book to read-up on Gatsby, or the social commentator who wrote it. "Honestly, I didn't have the time to read about him; the ticket was just sent to me a week ago."

The only objects marking time were the helium-filled purple and pink balloons, which started drooping under the crystal chandeliers as the night wore on. Otherwise, the event burst in and out in a fraternal blink, and left the crowd satisfied with full stomachs of braised beef, kielbasa, french bread and Italian food.

Jeff Kidwell, of Andover, said Fitzgerald would have enjoyed himself as a guest at the benefit, "He loved a good party," Kidwell said. "He probably would have written a short story, and perhaps run off with another woman."

Lorna Reed, of Taunton, scratched her head, wishing she knew more people. She spoke to her friend saying, "There are people here I've seen in the movies, but for the life of me I can't remember who they are. . . one of them smiled at me!"

Yannik Noah, who flew in from France for the party, said Fitzgerald would be shocked to attend this year's event. "He'd probably be aghast that so many people would try to capture his era and not give any spontaneity to their own lives." Wielding a drink and a sardonic smile, he seemed to be having a jolly-old time, in spite of it all.

All of this reminded me of the Great Gatsby himself, who often slipped off into the night, as his parties fulfilled the most wild and satirical expectations. Lady Astor might have hovered in pride over this festive occasion, which created both a realistic picture of the wealthy jet-set and a portrait of a tradition which rests on the laurels of the past. But, Nick Carraway, the benign narrator in Fitzgerald's most famous work would most definitely have had mixed emotions.

Pleasures of Paris

At the Museum of Fine Arts

by Rachel Power and Flavia Smith

Pleasures of Paris: Daumier to Picasso, a spectacular summer show at the Museum of Fine Arts, depicts Paris as the world's center of life, love and artistic fervor in the last half of the 19th century. This series of 200 or so paintings, posters, photographs and prints by such artists as Daumier, Manet, Degas, Renoir, Cassatt, Sargent and Picasso focuses on the pursuit of leisure by middle-class Parisians from the Revolution of 1848, until the outbreak of WWI. Ballet, horseracing, outdoor cafes, museums and bordellos were some of the entertainment that Parisians pursued with abandon and artists captured through their various mediums.

The circus, another popular form of entertainment, provided Spanish artist Pablo Picasso with vivid and colorful imagery. His Harlequin with Guitar, (1916) oil on wood, is an example of Picasso's infatuation with the brightly colored and patterned costumes of circus performers.

At the theater and in museums, artists were often drawn to the spectators rather than the spectacle. In Mary Cassatt's At the Opera, a woman dressed in black watches a performance through her opera glasses as a stranger in a nearby balcony trains his binoculars on her.

The darker side of late 19th century Paris was described by Hollis Clayson, associate professor of art history at Northeastern University, in a recent lecture at the Museum. She described a Paris of long lines, scarce food, desperate poverty and the many cat, dog and rat butchers who roamed the city. According to Clayson, by the end of the siege of 1871, most domestic animals had been sliced up as sandwich meat. Several illustrations bear out her grim assessment. One shows a man sitting at a restaurant table, eyebrows raised, arms in the air and a cat's tail in his mouth. The inscription reads: "The danger of eating a mouse is you never know when a cat will run after it." An 1887 painting, shows a morphine addict sticking a needle in her leg. In Paris in the Snow (1887) horses lie frozen on the road as street sweepers seek out small stoves for warmth.

TALKING HEADS - THE PLAY

by Jules Becker

TALKING HEADS-THE PLAY
Through August 4th at the Gloucester Stage
Company
508-281-4099
Written by Alan Bennett
Directed by Patrick Swanson Performed by
The Gloucester Stage
Company

One-person plays usually celebrate both the achievement and the frustration of a great life. Witness the loneliness of inspired poet Emily Dickinson in A Belle of Amherst or the alcoholism and deep suffering of gifted social observer Truman Capote in Tru. By contrast, the one-character teleplays of British author Alan Bennett focus on the unfulfilled lives of the uncelebrated. Four of the six plays that first appeared on BBC television under the title Talking Heads are now having their international stage premiere at the Gloucester Stage Company (through Sunday, Aug. 4) with a cast as good as any that you are likely to see this summer.

Talking Heads has absolutely nothing to do with David Byrne's identically titled rock group, yet Byrne would have no difficulty setting Bennett's disquieting monologues to music. Regardless that the writing and insights are often uneven, the monologues do share a telling combination of rationalization and self-delusion.

"Her Big Chance" finds Lesley, a limited young actress, talking herself into disrobing for a porno film. In "Soldiering On", a fairly complacent widow named Muriel holds on to what little satisfaction she can salvage from family relationships. Arguably the most touching of the four pieces, "A Chip in the Sugar" and "Bed Among the Lentils" respectively study an emotionally disturbed middle-aged son, Graham, who lives with his aging widowed mother and a bright but discontented vicar's wife, Susan, who seeks comfort in alcohol and later at Alcoholics Anonymous meetings.

While some of the monologues go on too long - "Chip" with overwritten text and "Soldiering" with director Patrick Swanson's lethargic pacing - Bennett and the talented GSC cast do make the 'Heads' memorable, even haunting. Gesturing in appropriate overdrive, Sandra Shipley catches the pathos as well as the humor of Lesley's professional naivete in "Her Big Chance". Unfortunately, this reviewer (who was not warned of a programming change) will have to make a return visit to see what this highly versatile actress does with Susan's bottomless hurt in "Bed Among the Lentils" (check the programming trios with GSC). Underrated Frances West brings some interest to insufferably conventional Muriel's comments about her troubled children in the dramatically slight "Soldiering".

James J. Fallon's designs have given the props - a fancy teapot, an oriental god (for Susan's involvement with an Indian grocer) and a goldfish - a thoughtfully ritualistic framework by arranging them on pillar-like stands around the stage. Jane Alois Stein's costumes - particularly for sensual Lesley draping a leopard-skin couch - smartly tap into personality differences that energize the play.

Fellow Englishman Harold Pinter packs more drama and enduring insight in one masterpiece like The Homecoming than Bennett in all the monologues of Talking Heads. Nevertheless, the artistry of Shipley, West and Trigger demands to be seen.

BOYZ 'N THE HOOD

STREET LIFE REALITIES TOO CLOSE TO HOME

Doughboy (Ice Cube) lives by the laws of the street in South Central LA

by Erica Weingart

Black film-writer-producer, John Singleton, might be the bomb that sparked off a deluge of teen-age gang shootings and brawls outside theaters across the country, but his film debut, BOYZ 'N THE HOOD, is not about violence; it's about survival. Singleton's message: a man without heroes is a dead man. Unfortunately, heroes in the 'Hood' of Southern Los Angeles are not as easily found as gun-fire, gangs, crack, and the limp blood-stained bodies of young males who are magnetically seduced at a young age by the power of money, guns, and drug-dealing.

Rites of passage for the three main characters: - Tre (played by Cuba Gooding Jr.), Doughboy (featuring NWA's emotional but tough-skinned rapper, Ice Cube), and Ricky (played by Morris Chestnut) - include ineffectual protection from confrontational police, crack deals giving birth to beautiful cars, making love, and fighting for their lives. All the while, young kids ride bikes, chase ice-cream trucks, and make jokes. But unlike kids in the suburbs, their sleep is punctuated by gun-fire.

Singleton's story hints of an eery reality: American Dream-Turned Nightmare. The homes of the three boys mimic the normality of middle-American suburbia. Wood-paneling, soft beds and sleek high-tops veil a daily undercurrent of violence and frustration. Men sit on stoops drinking malt liquor with their friends and crack-addicted mothers let their infants run blindly out into the street as they barter sex for drugs.

Cinematically, the film harks back to made-for-TV after-school specials in the 1970's, but the harsh realities coupled with the film-writer's powerful social message transcends any critical film-school criteria for special effects. Singleton feels that life in the "hood" is strange enough; there's no need for David Lynch-style surrealism.

As Tre, Doughboy and Ricky begin to grow into their lives, each one arms himself with emotional grenades styled to protect their dignity, manlihood and sense of safety. Doughboy escapes by drinking and doing drugs. Tre gets a job and studies for his college-entrance exams. Ricky hones his fantasy of becoming a football star and saving his single-parent family, who is counting on him to succeed and set them all free.

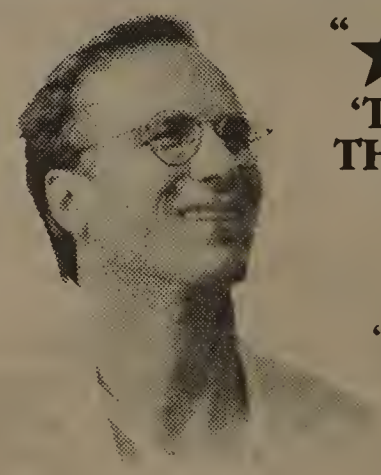
Singleton's characters, however, are not hardened criminals easily written off as victims of society; their struggle is universal. Their families could be anyone's . Singleton makes their neighborhood and their parents' struggle our own. The director's ability to tell the story straight is a challenge he has met with undisputed success, clarity, humor and vision. But now, Columbia Pictures is questioning it's decision to award movie contracts to new black film-makers who profile violent realities. Let's point fingers elsewhere.



Tre (Cuba Gooding, Jr.) and his girlfriend, Brandi (Nia Long)

Upcoming Flicks for Late Summer, Early Fall Release:

Cape Fear, starring Robert DeNiro, Nick Nolte, and Jessica Lange. Directed by Martin Scorscese. Tale of a sadistic convict (DeNiro) who seeks cruel revenge against the lawyer (Nolte) who sent him to prison. A re-make of the 1962 film starring Gregory Peck and Robert Mitchum; watch for cameos by these two leading men.

Dead Again, starring Kenneth Brannagh, Andy Garcia, Derek Jacobi, and Robin Williams. Suspense-thriller with plenty of psychological twists.

V.I. Warshawski

Good Fun But No Brain Teaser

by Jennifer Kroll

It has been said that Kathleen Turner took years of voice lessons in order to acquire her characteristic gravel-pit mutter. Whether it was the lessons or a pack-a-day habit, Turner growls her way through the title role in her latest film, V.I. Warshawski, (directed by Jeff Kanew) with all the witty malice her audience has come to cherish. Although the role is exceedingly hollow, for those who just can't get enough of Turner as the bitter-ballsy broad, this movie is a sure charmer.

Any woman who was left feeling neglected due to a general lack of "woman private eye" flicks will find a cure for the blues in this movie complete with violence, beefy men, sexual double entendres and the obligatory chase scene. One might expect V.I., who doesn't use her first name to avoid male condescension, to bring home the bacon and fry it up in a pan. But no. She's a modern gal - no cooking and no cleaning. Too bad she isn't liberated enough to stop herself from making insipid comments like, "There's just something about the right shade of lipstick and the right pair of shoes that makes a gal think anything is possible."

The movie's plot flows smoothly and simply enough. As it opens, V.I.'s been out of work and out of luck in the love department and is sharing her woes with a woman bartender friend. Enter beefcake: Bernard "Boom-Boom" Grafalk (Steven Meadows), a supposed hockey player - sans the obligatory hook nose. Boom-Boom has the leather jacket and peek-a-boo chest hair that send V.I. swooning. Only a couple of scenes later, however, Boom-boom is murdered, and V.I. has a new case on her hands as well as a bratty, adolescent apprentice. You guessed it, Boom-Boom's daughter, Kat (Angela Goethals), whose life is in danger.

There are good guys. There are bad guys. There are guns. There are action-packed fist fights - occasionally interrupted in order to search for expensive stiletto-heeled pumps lost in the scuffle. There is even a singular "touching" moment when the hard-nosed V.I. exhibits (can it be true?) maternal instincts. In the end, the bad guys die and truth and justice prevail.

Admittedly, V.I. Warshawski does have its strong points. An amusing stream of one-liners from the female characters keeps things just entertaining enough to allow viewers to forget how utterly silly the premise behind this film is. In one gem of a scene, having just been punched in the mouth by thugs, V.I. utters, "Ah sh...t! Do you know how hard it is to get blood out of cashmere!?!"

V.I. Warshawski could have been better, but it also could have been worse. It's not quite as stupid as its advertising campaign, which reads, "Killer Eyes. Killer Legs. Killer Instincts." would lead one to believe. Although Kathleen Turner's vain, vapid and otherwise ultra-masculine persona should serve to make anyone with an ounce of common sense wince, at least she has the good sense to remain clothed for this little number.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

By Kevin Stoehr & Shawn Goodwin

REGARDING HENRY
"Emotional Craftsmanship"

Directed by Mike Nichols and starring Harrison Ford as an ambitious but emotionally shallow attorney, this feel-good heart tugger is worth a viewing. Henry seemingly has it all - a posh pad on the Upper East side, a beautiful wife, loving daughter and status as a mogul lawyer - when an unexpected accident forces him not only to recover physically and emotionally but also to relearn everything: even how to tie his shoes. The most important lesson that Henry learns, however, is love.

Regarding Henry is a wonderfully acted film which at times borders on sappiness but it ultimately does not over-sentimentalize, thanks to Nichols' deft pacing. Fine performces by both Ford and Annette Benning, who portrays Henry's spouse, make this film a tribute to the simple but meaningful privileges of life. Look for a cameo by 24-year-old screenwriter Jeffrey Abrams - he's the grocery boy.

EUROPA EUROPA
"Stranger Than Fiction"

A MUST SEE! This Agnieszka Holland treasure is a remarkably poignant and provocative film about a Jewish boy coming of age in Nazi Germany. Born ironically on Hitler's birthday, Solek (Marco Hofschneider) is separated from his family and chooses to disavow his Jewish identity in order to survive as a solitary Jew in a world where Aryan-supremecy dogma rules. Surrounded by those who would like to "cut his flesh", Solek constantly wonders at the inexplicable revulsion his companions feel towards his race. After all, what separates him but a foreskin?

He struggles with his new identity, trying to fit in as he moves from a Russian orphanage to a German army camp and then to the top Hitler Youth school in the Fatherland. With no one to turn to, Solek fears anything could give him away: from the girlfriend who wants to bear the Fuehrer's child to a classroom lecture on "how to physically identify a Jew". This humorous and strikingly real, little-known film is in fact a true story. Showing only at the majestic Coolidge Corner Theatre.

JUNGLE FEVER
"Deep Tensions Across the Boards"

In this recent release from the master of urban tension, Wesley Snipes (of New Jack City fame) and Annabella Sciorra light up the screen as a racially mixed couple who must contend with the sometimes explosive mind-sets of parents and friends. Spike Lee, as in Do the Right Thing, plays a supporting role competently. But his forté is decidedly in the director's seat. Whether you find this film controversial or not, Lee forces you to think, and above all, react. This is a picture which begs for probing reflection, well after the images of black and white and the feverish sound track die on the screen.

Lee's newest, Jungle Fever, although not quite as riveting as his major magnum opus, Do the Right Thing, places him deservedly in the ballpark of big-time young directors. And do ya know, do ya know, do ya know, nobody at the academy of Motion Pictures will be able to supply sufficient reason if Lee does not earn his place among next year's nominees.

NAKED GUN 2 1/2: THE SMELL OF FEAR
"Side-Splitting Cinema"

Catch Zsa Zsa Gabor slapping a pair of police sirens. Catch a barrage of brilliant one-liners. Watch Leslie Neilsen as the ever-bumbling Lt. Frank Drebin in this hilarious sequel. Neilsen's dry humor and deadpan face merit laughs as he attempts to revive his romance with former flame (Priscilla Presley), and in doing so, ends up busting a conspiracy to control America's energy program.

Fast-paced and wonderfully timed, Blake Edwards' madcap satire offers a medley of cinematic puns-and-goofs that repeatedly trigger the comic nerve. Be sure to look for the Duke's mug postered on the 'wall of losers' at the bar where broken-hearted Drebin goes to drown his sorrows. A deluge of summer laughs.

TERMINATOR 2: JUDGEMENT DAY
"Technical Sorcery"

This Sci-fi dynamo of a film, directed by James Cameron, earns its place on the summer's-best list solely because of its technical wizardry and amazingly edited sequences. Then again with a $100 million budget, you expect something. T-2 doesn't disappoint. Its special effects necromancy ranks galaxies beyond those used in other recent pictures and clearly expands the boundaries of contemporary cinema's pulse.

The plot line serves only as a context for the mind-numbing, mercurial effects. Arnold Schwarzenegger returns to his domain of concrete-faced action, only this time as a good-guy cyborg assigned the task of protecting a teenage boy who will grow up to be a future hero for a band of ultra-freedom-warriors. Not recommended for young children or die-hard connoisseurs of fine acting.

TRAVEL

WEEKEND ESCAPE TO MARTHA'S VINEYARD

by Rachel Power

Tired of stepping on beer cans everytime you go to the beach? Looking to escape for a few days, but don't have a lot of spare cash? Why not steam across Vineyard Sound for a weekend on Martha's Vineyard. A 45-minute boat ride deposits you and your bags in Vineyard Haven or Oak Bluffs where island taxis, inexpensive shuttle buses and bike and moped rental shops await the opportunity to whisk you away to one of the six towns of Martha's Vineyard. Many hotels and inns offer reasonable rates, and you can always take a tour of the more glamorous spots without spending a dime.

Vineyard Haven is more of a year-round town than the other spots on the island, and has plenty to offer the weekend visitor. You may rent a bike, moped or car within 100 yards of the ferry terminal. Average daily rental prices range from $12 for a three-speed bike to $25 for a moped.

Don't miss the Bunch of Grapes Bookstore for browsing on a rainy day or the Black Dog Bakery and Tavern for the best baked goods and most interesting food on the island. The Black Dog, which overlooks the Vineyard Haven harbor, serves breakfast lunch and dinner from 7am to 9pm, with brunch on Sundays from 9am until 1pm. Patrons line up outside and wait willingly for hours to get a table. Famous for fresh seafood and huge portions, the Black Dog's ever-changing menu's prices range from $17.95 to $22.95 for such delicacies as blackened mako with mint raita, fresh lobster steamed in white wine and an assortment of specialty pastas. All desserts and breads are baked fresh daily at the Black Dog Bakery, and the 18-year-old recipe for fudge bottom pie is a perennial favorite.

The younger crowd will enjoy visiting the eclectic hamlet of Oak Bluffs. A five-minute walk from the ferry slip or a seven-mile trek from Vineyard Haven will lead you to the center of Oak Bluffs, where boarding houses and inns are nestled between shops and the eccentric, colorful gingerbread cottages of the Martha's Vineyard Camp-Meeting Association, a residential community established in 1835.

When looking for accommodations in Oak Bluffs, try the Oak House. One of the more comfortable inns in town, the Oak House is an ideal setting for a weekend visitor because of its close proximity to beaches, shops and restaurants. This beautifully restored, antique-filled inn, built in 1872, is located on the water on Beach Rd. just five minutes from the Steamship Authority terminal. Prices range from $95 to $140 per room, which includes a home-baked continental breakfast and an afternoon tea on the porch with a view of the ocean.

There are a variety of restaurants to choose from on Circuit Ave., Oak Bluffs' main street. The Oyster Bar is an upscale neighborhood bistro with 14-foot ceilings, fluted columns and floor-length lace curtains. Serving dinner seven days a week, the Oyster Bar is famous for its raw bar, which boasts eight types of oysters, and its amazing assortment of local and exotic fish and prime meats. Prices run from $80 to $120 for dinner for two, which includes wine from an extensive wine cellar. One of their more popular dishes is the lobster pan roast which is a lobster bisque cooked in a pan with heavy cream and chunks of fresh lobster meat.

For a more affordable evening out try Giordano's Restaurant, a popular Italian eatery which serves great pizza, located on the corner of Circuit Ave. and Main St. Here $20 to $25 will buy a complete dinner for two. Another inexpensive Circuit Ave. restaurant ,which has live music at night, is the Ritz Cafe. For nightlife try the Lampost or the Atlantic Connection for drinking and dancing and David's Island House for a more relaxed piano bar atmosphere.

During the day if you want to swim or sunbathe in Oak Bluffs, visit the two calm and sandy beaches which stretch along Beach Rd.

If you continue along Beach Rd., you will reach Edgartown, which was once a prosperous whaling town as well as the island's first settlement. Edgartown's history is evident in the many well-preserved Victorian mansions which ring the busy harbor. Widow's walks, where the wives of whaling captains once climbed to search the horizon for returning ships, top many of these homes. Other features of this charming town are brick sidewalks, freshly painted white picket fences and well-groomed gardens filled with roses and wild flowers.

MARTHA'S VINEYARD TRAVEL TIPS

Steamship Authority Information:
Main number in Woods Hole (508) 548-3788
Number in Vineyard Haven (508) 693-0367
Boats run daily from Woods Hole to Vineyard Haven and Oak Bluffs from 7:15am to 8:30pm (9:45pm on Fri and Sun)

Tickets: Adults round-trip ticket: $9.00
Children round-trip ticket: $4.50
Car only (no passenger) round-trip fare: $68.00
Additional fare for walking on with a bike: $5.50

If you are bringing a car, make sure you call well ahead to make a reservation, or you may not get on.

For information about island events and for attractions and complete listings of all inns and restaurants on island (including prices), call the Chamber of Commerce in Vineyard Haven at (508) 693-0085. Representatives are extremely helpful.

The Oak House: Beach Road, Oak Bluffs (508) 693-4187
Lambert's Cove Country Inn: Lambert's Cove Road, West Tisbury (5 miles outside of Vineyard Haven) 508) 693-229

Edgartown is overflowing with elegant inns and delicious restaurants. The exquisite Charlotte Inn with its antique store and five-star French restaurant serves dinner outdoors under the stars and is world-renowned. You will find more affordable outdoor dining at Among the Flowers. Serving breakfast, lunch and dinner from 8am to 11pm, Among the Flowers will feed a family of four for about $25. The restaurant serves homemade soups, salads and quiches; lemon chicken ($7.95) is one of the most popular dinner items. The Wharf Pub and the Navigator Restaurant also serve reasonably priced basic fare and are well-known night spots.

A trip to Chappaquidick, a tiny island off of the coast of Martha's Vineyard, accessible only by private boats and the three-car Chappy 'On Time' Ferry, is a pleasant afternoon outing. Chappy's East Beach, which is part of a wildlife reserve, has rough surf and beautiful ocean views. Much less frequented than other Edgartown beaches, East Beach is a quiet and relaxing spot for digging into a summer novel.

If you are looking for crowds, teenyboppers and volleyball, head out to South Beach in Katama, another part of Edgartown. There is a free shuttle bus which runs from the center of town and drops you off at the water's edge.

An up-island drive through West Tisbury to Chilmark will present you with a new perspective of the geography of Martha's Vineyard. Rolling green hills, rambling antique stone walls and far-off glimpses of the glittering ocean surround you as you follow South Rd. through Vineyard farmland. Lambert's Cove Country Inn is a romantic island inn tucked away amid the up-island beauty of West Tisbury. A great place for a quiet weekend retreat or a wedding bash, this inn is an unexpected delight nestled at the end of a meandering, pine-sheltered dirt road. Seasonal rates range from $110 to $125 per person, double occupancy, and include a continental breakfast. The inn's dining room is open nightly and the secluded Lambert's Cove Beach is only 3/4 mile away.

Nightlife is practically nonexistent in Chilmark, but don't despair; there is the famous Homeport Restaurant which serves hearty seafood dinners for $15 to $25. At the end of North Rd., in the scenic fishing village of Menemsha, the Homeport overlooks Menemsha Pond and offers both a breathtaking view of the sunset and a stretch of beach for an after-dinner stroll.

Gay Head, the ancestral home of the Wampanoag Indians, offers spectacular vistas and sunsets from its much-photographed red clay cliffs. There are a few shops and a working lighthouse to visit, but the main attraction here is simply the sunset. If you are lucky enough to know someone with a private home you can fall asleep in total silence while the light from the Gay Head Lighthouse pierces the darkness. If not, take your bike, pack a picnic and make it a day-trip.

Food Folks and Money

by Jason Gregoricus

Never in recent memory have I experienced a restaurant where the interior setting and the quality of the menu have stood in such delightful opposition. Chef John Levins' (originally from St. Thomas) Caribbean-influenced food ranks right up there with the best I have ever had. He uses spices like a Renaissance artist does shades of color. But, you must be warned, much of the fare is not for the faint-hearted. A dish, such as the Downhome Spicy Goat Stew, has a true sneak attack flavor to it that leaves you lunging for the water pitcher several minutes after the initial taste. Levins is a magician and should be awarded some sort of medal from Congress for his performance.

The menu changes periodically (I happened to arrive on a night where the choices were limited but less expensive than usual) yet further investigation reveals that Mr. Levins' dishes are constantly exotic and never tame. The Barbecued Chicken and Baby Back Ribs practically dances on the plate with an especially lively tomato and citrus BBQ sauce, and the Peppered Pot Roast is soft and forever redefining itself while being tasted. The selection, no matter how limited, never leaves you wanting.

With praise such as this one may expect to conjure up images of a restaurant with plush chairs, origami napkins and a pug-nosed maitre'd. Hardly. The Green St. Grille, attached to Charlie's Tap & Jazz Club, is about as pretentious as a drunken Teamster. The tablecloths are plastic, the bread is dry, the lighting resembles the Combat Zone's and the interior is about as spacious as the galley of the Mayflower. But so what? The character of this jazzy restaurant is its ability to win over even the most stuffy. The owner, the laconic Mr. John Clifford, is a large man who apparently knows many of his customers by name and takes just as much pride in his ability to attract quality musicians/performers as he does in the food. Some of the larger names heard at Green St. have been Don Cherry, Ed Blackwell, Tracy Chapman and Anita Baker. The name dropping notwithstanding, Green St. is a haven for the talented and the trying. Shows vary so anyone wishing to check it out should call ahead of time for a listing.

This reviewer gives the Green St. Grille the green light. The shows and especially that viciously spicy food keep those with an eye for something special and somewhat quirky very happy.

CHEAP EATS

Nick's Beef and Beer Real Food for Carnivores

by Dan Silver

"Sorry, the tap just ran dry." How many times have I heard that mid-way through my first pitcher at Nick's Beef and Beer. Time was when Nick's was a favorite college beer parlor, and the brew never stopped flowing. Students from throughout the Boston-area would arrive at 1688 Mass. Ave. in Cambridge clamoring for cheap pitchers and cheeseburger specials. Well, times are a changin', sort of.

Don't get me wrong, Nick's is still the same place - cheap, hearty Greek fare with malted hops aplenty to wash it down. It's just that in these days of alcohol moderation, management has decided that it's safer, and more profitable, to sell bottles rather than pitchers of beer. And a funny thing happened. All of a sudden the students started to realize what the regulars had known for years: the food at Nick's is pretty darn good.

Nick's Beef and Beer House Dan Silver

The old standby Double Cheeseburger Special costs just $3.00, comes with mounds of fries and, if you're not watching your cholesterol, will fill you up for about a week. If you're looking for something equally hardy but less greasy, try the ShishKaBob Oriental. This dish comes with rice pilaf, roasted potatoes and vegetables, all for just $4.00. The meat is chunky and tender from long hours of marination.

Other Nick's specialties include Lamb Chops for $6.45, Baked Half Chicken for $3.00 and Broiled Steak for $4.75 (where else in Boston can you get a decent steak with potatoes for under $5?). Nick's also has spaghetti, homemade soups and a Greek salad with killer dressing.

One word of warning to the uninitiated: the service at Nick's is inconsistent at best. As I sat surrounded by 1970's red and black and waited for someone to acknowledge my presence, I started thinking about the last time I was at Nick's and the old battleaxe of a waitress who tried to scare a tip out of me. Then, as that telltale thud of my plate landing on the table and the wet spot on my knee, where the waitress had just spilled my Coke, alerted me that my food had arrived, I looked at the portion and remembered why I was there.

Wally's - Great Music Without the Glitter

by Rey Roldan

Makoto Oka Jamming at Wally's Scot tSaraceno

In these days of gaudy styles, commercial sounds and Club MTV, wouldn't it be great to get back to basics, back to the days when you went to a club to listen to the music, not to admire the lighting system? Wally's in the South End has no strobe lights, no spandex-clad women, no synthesizers and no samplers. What Wally's does have is authentic jazz and blues - the kind that really count.

Located on the first floor of 427 Mass. Ave, near the corner of Columbus Ave, Wally's is a tough find. Even Spenser for Hire could miss it camouflaged between brownstones with nothing but a small, nondescript sign announcing its existence. But seek out Wally's and experience first-rate jazz in appropriately humble surroundings. It's well worth the effort!

Wally's is shoe-box small, dark, and if there's one heavy smoker in attendance, smoky. There are only seven tables and a smattering of bar stools in the entire place, so it gets packed quickly. Wally's is descended upon by people from all spokes of the Hub: from musicians and locals to briefcases and Berklee students, all of whom have been known to jump on stage and jam with the band. Despite the eclectic crowd, Wally's retains a comfortable, down-home atmosphere. Its one unifying feature is the music.

If you've ever been to New Orleans, you'll quickly note the similarities between Wally's and the local bars just off Burbon Street , where the energy flows from the musicians' souls - not from the desks of publicity agents. The talent at Wally's is mostly local, featuring the likes of Cynthia Felton and Friends. And though the acts aren't highly polished, they make up for their shortcomings with frenetic verve.

Your best bet is to get to Wally's early (around 9:30) so you can grab a seat and a $2 Bud (drink prices increase when the band hits the stage). Once you're situated comfortably, sit back, relax and revel in the sweet seduction of the cool sounds of sax. Wally's offers the most pure and spirited jazz you'll find in Boston.

LOLLAPALOOZA

by Rey Roldan

Now that summer is in full swing, you've probably put away the black clothes and gloomy, introspective music in favor of neon styles and the light sounds of the Beach Boys. Be forewarned! If life's reality has become a blur of Budweiser commercials, volleyball tournaments and sand castles, you are in for a rude awakening.

Smack in the middle of the sunny days and shallow pursuits of beaches, tans and margaritas is the heavy, fulfilling and darkly uplifting Lollapalooza Festival. Seven bands from all angles of alternative music have gathered their tribes and politics for this one-of-a-kind event.

Formed as a dream project by Perry Farrell and Stephen Perkins of Jane's Addiction and Marc Geiger and Don Muller of Triad Artists, the festival brings together more than Doc Maartens and black eye-liner. It's a dark carnival straight out of Siouxsie and the Banshees' 1988 release Peepshow, with each band's radical interpretation of music and politics mixing into one wild and woolly extravaganza. Filled with informative booths, exotic concession stands and local art displays, Lollapalooza is an all-day forum for confronting issues ranging from human rights to the environment. And while it's named after a lollipop, don't expect any tasty treats. This concert will feature some of today's angriest, most cynical artists.

The Rollins Band will start off the show with their in-your-face, post-punk sound. Drawing from his past with hardcore band, Black Flag, vocalist Henry Rollins plans to - in his own words - keep his band "tight and on attack mode."

Texas-based Butthole Surfers, whose music picks up where Captain Beefhart left off in the late 70's, will ignite the crowd with dense guitar arrangements and ribald onstage antics. Then the Godfather of rap, Ice-T, will forge new ground with his sometimes violent, sexual rhymes about life on the streets.

Perhaps the darkest of all the bands, Trent Reznor and his nine inch nails, will follow with music about hate, anger and despair set to a post-industrial beat. Then the most commercially successful of the bands, Living Colour, will continue to break down the barriers they've confronted since their first album, Vivid, by attacking apathy and ignorance.

The sole British group, Siouxie and the Banshees, will bring their Middle-Eastern mysticism, tribal rhythms and progressive pop. Pioneers since the early 80's, the Banshees will set out to prove that regardless of age, they are still at the forefront of the alternative scene. And finally, two-time grammy winners glam-thrashers Jane's Addiction will unleash a vicious rock and roll attack to close the show.

Lollapalooza promises to be one of the most exciting rock shows of 1991. The critics are already touting it as the surprise blockbuster of the summer. So take the day off from work, leave the spandex in the hamper and get ready to open your mind to music, politics and art.

What Happened to Concerts On the Common?

by Toby Streett

The Boston Common is the nation's oldest public park and has been home to many events in its long and glorious past - some of them forgettable and some not. Two of these events which are no longer around for public consumption are witch burnings and rock concerts.

While we can't answer for the fate of the witches, we can tell you about the state of Concerts on the Common. That musical series has been cancelled in favor of a new one, dubbed A Festival of Sounds, which features lesser-known local acts in place of the big-time touring bands of the past. What's nice about this series is that the concerts are held in neighborhood parks throughout Boston - in addition to the Common - at no charge. Jazz, folk, latin, oldies, cajun and even opera comprise this summer's musical menu.

So if you want to sway to the sounds of pulsating guitars, you're best off making the drive to an outdoor arena - like Great Woods. If you'd prefer to stay local, check out the Festival of Sounds at any number of Boston-area parks. And if you insist upon reminiscing on the Common, attend Cablevision's Familyfest Concert on Sept. 9 or the Boston Music and Arts Festival on Sept. 29.

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game without being there. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans bantering and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. The crowd consists primarily of young professionals. The dress tends to be glitzy but is more relaxed in the summer. Cover charge increases after 10pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri & Sat nights.

•AVEROF 354-4500, 1924 Mass. Ave., Camb. If you have a fetish for hommus or navels, this is the place for you. Located in Porter Sq., this casual Middle Eastern/Greek restaurant features live ethnic music and belly dancing nightly. The crowd is composed primarily of regulars, but everyone is welcome. No cover (except on special occasions) and no dress code.

WED 31st.--Averof Band featuring vocalists Susanna and Souli from Wed thru Sun FRI 2nd.--Harry Bedrosian every Fri and Sat MON 5th.--Mitchell Kaltsunas and Ensemble every Mon TUE 6th.--Freddy Elias with the Kokoras Brothers and Mike Gregran every Tue

•AXIS 262-2437, 13 Lansdowne St., Bos. Pull out your favorite leather and leave your business suit at home. Axis spans 2 floors and is a progressive dance club with a primitive feel (lots of black). The crowd is mixed - everyone from punks to college students. Moderate cover varies with the night. Creative dress suggested.

WED 31st.--Mr. Big with the Lost FRI 2nd.--The Throbs, Streetheart, The Dols WED 7th.--Taupier, Tragus, Ain't No Shame (formerly of Warlock & Doro) FRI 9th.--Blood Oranges •BACK BAY BISTRO 536-4477, 565 Boylston St., Bos. A quiet, trendy spot. Boston's widest array of wines by the glass. Not for nightowls - the bistro closes by 11pm even on weekends - but an ideal place for quiet conversation and a bite to eat. No cover. Casual dress.

•BAY TOWER ROOM 723-1666, 60 State St., Bos. A sophisticated restaurant/bar atop 60 State St. A great place to bring the dates you want to impress. Features a panoramic view of the harbor and dancing to live music. No cover. Proper dress required.

•BELL IN HAND TAVERN 227-2098, 45 Union St., Bos. The self-proclaimed "happiest tavern in Boston," this laid-back pub is frequented by a melange of tourists, Boston professionals, college students and locals. No cover. Casual dress. Jukebox music and free munchies weekdays 5-7pm.

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos. Live Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name symbolizes Irish Catholic repression by the British. Traditional Irish music is served along with a host of Irish beers. Try the Guinness. Food is home spun. And remember, here, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! If you want to mix with an upbeat crowd of students, professionals, locals etc. and get involved in the show, this is your bag. Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

WED 31st.--Celtic Clan All Week WED 7th.--Eugene Byrne All Week

•BOATHOUSE 491-6476, 56 JFK St., Camb. This Harvard Sq. institution caters to Harvard students and recent grads. The small outdoor patio is fun in the summer. Inside it's nearly always crowded. No cover. Casual dress. Tell the bouncer that you're from Yale and get in for half price.

•BORDER CAFE 864-6100, 32 Church St., Camb. If you're not in a hurry and crave Mexican food, or just margaritas, stop by the Border Cafe. Always crowded and noisy, it's a favorite haunt of college students and young professionals. The walls are adorned with animal skulls and sombreros for that Southwestern feel. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks, and some guy wearing a Hawaiian shirt and a dozen leis make you feel like you've left Boston proper for the tropics. The crowd is young and the music is often live. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

WED 31st.--The Curtis Knight Band Wed thru Sun

•BOSTON BILLIARDS 536-POOL, 126 Brookline Ave., Bos. Voted #1 billiard club in the nation in '91, this modern-day upscale pool hall has the comfortable feel of a living room. The crowd is a mix of different ages and professions. Located just outside Kenmore Sq. Free pool lessons Mon nights. Waiters bring drinks to your table. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOSTON GARDEN SPORTS CAFE 723-6664, 120 Causeway St., Bos. If you couldn't get tickets to the Garden but still want to enjoy the game atmosphere, stop in at this mini Garden museum and watch the game on big screen TV. Enthusiastic crowd. No bandwagon fans here! No cover. Casual dress. Bruin players sometimes drop in. Closes early on non-game nights.

•BOSTON RAMROD 266-2986, 1254 Boylston St., Bos. An active gay bar in the Fenway area. Patrons range in age from 21 to 50+. Appetizers served Mon-Fri 5-8pm. Tue. is two-step night, featuring country and western music. Thu and Fri are leather nights.

•BOSTON SAIL LOFT 227-7280, 80 Atlantic Ave., Bos. A popular waterfront bar with a full menu and view of the harbor. The crowd is young and on the move - lots of professionals and business people. With a superb harbor vista, there isn't much need for entertainment. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOW & ARROW PUB 547-6819, 1 Bow St., Camb. An unassuming local bar tucked away just off Mass. Ave. in Harvard Sq. A well kept secret by college students, bikers, locals, and dart players. The perfect place to relax over a few drinks. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOX SEAT LOUNGE Howard Johnson's 267-3100, 575 Comm. Ave., Bos. This hotel bar popular with Red Sox fans, BU faculty members and local business people is one of Kenmore Sq.'s few post-college hangouts. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu. Free cheese and crackers 5-8pm weekdays.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos. Everyone knows where it is, but few locals ever make it inside. The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston. A rock club featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code.

•CLUB M-80 254-2054, 969 Comm. Ave., Bos. A New York/Eurostyle club, complete with selective doormen. It's just a small room (actually part of the Paradise), but it attracts a good-sized crowd, good-lookers too. Music is usually DJ dance music, but occasionally live acts perform. Cover varies but is generally steep. The crowd is trendy so dress up; it will improve your chances.

•COMEDY CONNECTION AT CHARLES PLAYHOUSE 426-6339, 76 Warrenton St., Bos. Boston's oldest original comedy nightclub since 1968. Rated by "Rolling Stone" and "Vanity Fair" as the nation's top comedy club. Noteworthy headliners have included Rosanne Barr, Robin Williams and Steven Wright.

•COMEDY CONNECTION AT DUCK SOUP 695-9922, 246 Tremont St., Bos. Boston's other original comedy club has been making people chuckle, laugh and guffaw for over 15 years. 2 shows Fri and Sat. Appetizers served. Moderate to heavy admission fee ($5-10) depending on the night. Casual but neat dress.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. "Let no man thirst for the lack of real ale" is the motto at this microbrewery/restaurant which features glass walls through which thirsty patrons can expectantly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. 10 English ales on tap including Burton's Bitter served at 52 degrees. Commonwealth Brewing Company's proximity to the Boston Garden translates into before and after game crowds. Live bands play Sat nights. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory - no samples.

•COPPERFIELD'S 247-8605, 98 Brookline Ave., Bos. A beer-soaked college bar except after Sox games when Copperfield's attracts an avid sports crowd. Large crowds, Jukebox music, local live acts blaring Rock & Roll and a small dance floor liven the atmosphere. Basketball and video games too. Modest cover Thu-Sat. Collared shirts are a must.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complimented by adobe booths and a multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

WED 31st.--Night Magic every Tues, Wed and Fri. THUR 1st.--Brian Walkley Quartet every Sun, Mon, Thu.

•DAD'S DINER 296-DADS, 911 Boylston St., Bos. A restaurant on weekdays. A hopping 50's bar at night and on weekends. Attracts a young crowd - collegiate and professional. No cover. Dress is casual. You'll love the old-fashioned Jukebox!

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos. This Newbury St. hot spot fills up consistently with singles and college students, not to mention sports fans. Dark and noisy. More action as night turns into day; this is a place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•DIAMOND JIM'S PIANO BAR Lenox Hotel 536-5300, 65 Exeter St., Bos. A hotel piano bar with a relaxed atmosphere. Melt into an oversized lounge chair and absorb the music. The crowd runs the age gamut (from 21 to 60+). No cover. Dress varies from casual to business wear. Tue is Jazz night.

•PASSIM 492-7679, 47 Palmer St., Camb. Passim, Latin for "here and there", is one of the oldest coffeehouses in the nation. This relaxing Harvard Sq. pad serves no alcohol. It is, however, the spot to catch inspiring Folk and Bluegrass while escaping from the everyday land of alcoholic bliss. The music is contemporary and acts such as Tracy Chapman and Tom Waits have headlined here. The menu highlights light yummy fare and strong cappuccino. There's an outdoor patio and a giftshop that sells jewelry. Moderate cover. Casual dress.

THUR 1st.--Bob Gibson FRI 2nd.--Pierce Pettis SAT 3rd.--Pierce Pettis WED 7th.--Bill Morrissey, J. Cunningham, and J. Jennings THUR 8th.--John Gorka plus Ellen Cross FRI 9th.--John Gorka plus Ellen Cross SAT 10th.--John Gorka plus Ellen Cross •PLAY IT AGAIN SAM'S 232-4242, 1324 Comm. Ave., Allston. Did you know that neither Bogie nor Bergman ever said, "Play it again Sam"? Well, this isn't Casablanca and Sam's attracts a collegiate crowd, mostly from BC and BU. The club is split up into 3 rooms: a bar and booth area, a dance floor room and a downstairs club. Beer is readily available by the pitcher and bands play on Tue and Sat. DJ dancing the rest of the week. Moderate cover. Casual dress.

•PLAZA BAR AT COPLEY PLAZA Copley Plaza Hotel 267-5300, 138 St. James Ave., Bos. Plunge into a posh leather lounge chair, sit back and enjoy local and national cabaret acts Mon-Sat until 11:30pm. A good place for the business crowd to forget about business. The mood is relaxed, albeit formal. No cover. Proper dress required. Full menu. Hors d'ouvres served 5-6pm.

WED 31st.--Ken Stanton Tue-Sat MON 5th.--Ray Santisi every Monday

•PLOUGH AND STARS 492-9653, 912 Mass. Ave., Camb. Another of Boston's popular Irish bars. (Now we know what makes those Irish eyes smile.) This is a great place to see live music without the cover charge. Music ranges from Rock and Reggae to Blues and Bluegrass. The atmosphere is festive - even a little raucous. No dress code. Features Bass, Guinness and Harp on tap.

WED 31st.--Bones of Contention THUR 1st.--Madeleine Hall FRI 2nd.--Kevin Connelly SAT 3rd.--The Hub Caps Band MON 5th.--Manatee TUE 6th.--Plain Jane WED 7th.--Screaming Coyotes THUR 8th.--Madeleine Hall FRI 9th.--? •POUR HOUSE LOUNGE 236-1767, 907-909 Boylston St., Bos. This very basic bar can be a welcome escape from the upscale Newbury St. nightlife just around the block. Join other professionals, artists, punks and college students in drinking or just socializing at this lively, unpretentious dive bar. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu until 12:30am. Tue. night is Dead night. A cornucopia of cheap eats available.

•PURPLE SHAMROCK 227-2060, 1 Union St., Bos. An Irish bar with a touch of Faneuil Hall. Entertainment alternates between traditional Irish music and DJ dance music. Giant-screen TV. Moderate cover varies. Try the flaming shots. Casual dress. Full menu.

•RATHSKELLER 537-2750, 526 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos. Affectionately known as the "RAT", this is a rock club with staying power. In fact, it is Boston's first New Wave Club. Past headliners include the Police and R.E.M. 3 floors of music. A hardcore alternative crowd - lots of leather, even a nose ring here and there. No cover upstairs. Varies downstairs. No dress code.

THUR 1st.--The Jesters, the Elements, Swift Ice Cubes, Paper Chickens FRI 2nd.--18+ Show with Posse NFX (formerly Gangstarr Posse) with Stompbox, and Dreams Made Flesh and in the balcony is Richie Parsons and Friends SAT 3rd.--18+ Show with Nisi Period, DDT, Curious Ritual, Blood Farmers and in the balcony is the Subterraneans THUR 8th.--18+ Mute/Elektra lecture Crime and City Solution and Come FRI 9th.--Drumming on Glass, Medicine Ball, the Swirlies, Madbox and Candy Butcher in the balcony SAT 10th.--The Freeze, the Johnnies, Carnal Carnival, Not Our Dog and balcony-TBA

• RED HAT 523-2175, 9 Bowdoin St., Bos. It's not London, but the Charles might look like the Thames after a night in this dark and casual pub. Attracts young professionals and Beacon Hill residents. No cover. Casual dress. One of the few places you can still get pitchers of mixed drinks!

Boyfriend Fails Own Comparison Test

ASK DR. RUTH

by Dr. Ruth Westheimer

Q. My boyfriend and I have been together almost seven months now. We're serious about each other, but he still hasn't agreed to be monogamous. Until he does, I continue to use condoms. He says the condoms are hurting our sex. I cannot have an orgasm during intercourse unless I am also being stimulated manually. He say no other woman in his life has needed this extra attention.

We're both in our 20's, but he has had more partners than I have. He blames my "problem" on the condoms, which he says must be cutting down on my sensitivity. I think he's wrong. Is he?

A. What nonsense he is giving you! Bravo to you for using the condoms until you are in a monogamous relationship. You must continue doing so. Most women do require direct clitoral stimulation to have an orgasm; and most women do not have an orgasm during intercourse without that additional stimulation. Condoms have nothing to do with this. Tell him I said so!

Also, I don't like what he says about other women. It is never helpful to compare one lover with another one. Maybe he is not the love of your life.

Q. My 20-year-old son and I have a good relationship. We have open discussions, and his friends are always welcome here. Several months ago he called and asked if he could bring his girlfriend home from college on break with him. When I enthusiastically agreed, he asked, "What are the sleeping arrangements?" I said, "You in your room, her in the guest room." He decided they would sleep at a friend's and visit me during the days, which they did.

The girl is history. My son and I still have a good relationship. But, for the future, I'd like to know how to handle the situation. Did I do the right thing or not? I'm divorced and have never had a "friend" sleep over when he was here. He says I'm weird.

A. Congratulations on having such a good relationship with your son. No, you aren't weird! You have every right to set the rules in your own home. If you don't feel comfortable with your son sharing a bed, don't go along with it. You'll just feel more uncomfortable - and probably communicate that feeling to your son and his guest no matter how hard you try not to.

Of course, if he does have a girlfriend staying in the guest room, don't think you're responsible for checking the beds in the middle of the night!

Q. I've been seeing a married man for three years now. I know you are going to say he'll never leave his wife for me, but I think he will. We were platonic friends for a year before we became lovers, so I know him well. Also, I am in my 30's, old enough to understand men, not a foolish young thing.

We did have great sex until six months ago. Then he began having difficulty getting and maintaining an erection. I have tried performing oral sex on him, but it no longer works. He says his doctor says there is no medical problem. I don't know if he can perform with his wife or not. I am just assuming they stopped having sex when he began having sex with me.

Do you think he is troubled by guilt because of our affair? Or do you think it's me? Am I doing something wrong sexually? And if so, what can I do to turn him on again?

A. I'm not going to tell you he won't leave his wife for you, since you asked me not to say that. However, I can say you should never assume a man has stopped having sex with his wife because he's begun an affair. Often married people have more sex at home when they begin affairs! He may be troubled by guilt. He may want to end the affair and not know how to do so. I can't speculate on why he is having these performance problems, but I doubt you are doing something wrong.

If you were married to him, I would suggest you see a therapist together. Since you aren't, why don't you talk to someone alone?

ROCKIE HOROSCOPE

by Rockie Gardiner

If you know your ascendant, read it too.

GENERAL FORECAST: Here we go again - another round of nice and nasty. Go ahead, cut out of school, work, etc. Since the void-of-course Libra moon won't get you into any discernible action until 11 p.m. when it enters sexy Scorpio, you can't be held responsible for your actions. And if those actions consist of straddling the line between earth and water, paying homage to the wind and the sun, who will blame you? Certainly not the loving soul, the hot bod who'll share the earthly delights of the Venus-Mars conjunction and the weekend with you. What about the jealous type you're with on Monday, when Venus and power-crazed Pluto are unfriendly? Be forewarned that this is not nearly as unfriendly as it gets on Tuesday when Mars and Pluto are square. The last time these two planets were in a difficulty aspect (the opposition), Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait. 'Nuff said? On Wednesday, after an utterly delusional Mercury-Neptune opposition, you can try to divine the meaning of the first eclipse of the season, a penumbral lunar eclipse that peaks at almost 8 p.m. in 5 degrees of Capricorn-Cancer. Good Luck.

ARIES (March 20-April 19)
You are not alone. You couldn't go through every episode of this week's drama without an accomplice, say a Leo or a Scorpio who is experienced in riding the roller coaster of romance through to its final twist, and is only too glad to show you where the blade goes. Love, sex, death and other people's money equals an interesting summer romance. Do not take it too seriously, please.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
Oh well, there's love and stuff and then there's the family and your real-estate broker. It's not clear who provokes thoughts of murder and mayhem, but you seem to be under a Svengalian spell. The loving part is very much so, the tough stuff can be cruel. Your past doesn't quite catch up with you, but your partner is incensed anyway. Decisions about money matters should be postponed until this week is history.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
Too much is happening and the things that have an impact are too ephemeral, or just plain weird, to base real-life decisions on. Besides, the lunar eclipse can skew your emotions as badly as an afflicted Mercury (and this week your ruling planet is certifiably afflicted) can affect your ability to think things out. So under the circumstances, the best you can hope for is a quick escape to a romantic hideaway where you can be utterly charming and irrational in total privacy.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
With all the planetary action this week, you could miss the fact that it's your moon ruler that's being eclipsed by the Cancer sun. Therefore you must protect yourself from too much friction, too little faith and too many partners acting as weird as they are wired. And when does your version of the romantic encounter occur? Probably right after you buy a luxury item (Leo in your money house) you've been coveting. Try keeping it in your hot hands; don't knuckle under to his or her wily ways on Wednesday.

LEO (July 23-August 22)
Unlike their descendants, there "seems to be very little sexual jealousy among the gorillas." You'd better take this message to heart - it's what I heard as I contemplated your forecast - because this week Mars and Venus, the planets that govern sexual attraction, are conjunct in your sign. And what's more, they are under attack from intensely controlling Pluto, so only God knows where all this passion will lead you. Incidentally, a recurring family business matter may recur again.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22)
Try to extricate yourself from the madness around you and concentrate on sorting your thoughts into some semblance of order as the week ends. Until then, you're a victim of your lover's or your current employer's plans. Everything is unpredictable on Monday when your Mercury ruler is dominated by "let's shatter some glasses" Uranus. Then Neptune casts a miasmic spell on Wednesday, just when you thought you could handle the strangeness of the full-moon eclipse.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22)
The solstice can usher in a new career alternative, something that relates more to your family interests than to corporate America's. You may also get inextricably involved in a friend's affairs, so much so that it winds up costing you money to uninvolve yourself. Keep the name of your local bail bondsman handy, just in case. You could also turn a platonic relationship into a mad, passionate one until the lunacy of the lunar eclipse lets loose its grip on you.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21)
Not one of your better weeks since you may be at cross-purposes. While career matters "go", your personal scene could be stuck in one of your outmoded beliefs. Is it time to question your attachment to past passions? Or is the high emotional tenor of the week going to send you away screaming? By Thursday, you could be semi-okay again, but until then, don't seek out unnecessary pain. There is no gain.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21)
Reflected glory should be quite enough for you this week. If you step directly into the limelight, you could be subject to the slings and arrows hurled by outrageous folks who can't pin the source of their misfortune. Try to make sure they don't get mad at you. Also, avoid making the gratuitous purchase because all money matters are covered in vague Neptunian vapors. Your muse might appreciate your flight of fancy; your accountant won't.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20)
You can partake of the abundant pleasures the weekend brings and then gracefully bypass the pain that follows. Nonetheless, you might wind up nursing a miserable friend through a week of woe. What you should watch out for, however, are hasty words that color the truth. I wouldn't call anyone an outright liar until the Independence Day weekend, but I would start paying attention to what's being said on Wednesday, right before the full-moon eclipse in your sign.

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 18)
Friends and lovers provide the motivation; your partner provides the rewards. The only person you have to watch out for is your boss or a controlling parent. While Venus and Mars, the love planets, cavort in your marriage house this weekend, you couldn't be happier or more sexually fulfilled. But, after Monday, Pluto, ruler of sexually transmitted diseases, demands his pound of flesh. Can you honestly say, "I gave at the office"?

PISCES (February 19-March 19)
Some of you might enjoy a lovely romantic interlude, and some of you might enjoy lovely golden jewelry. It all depends on which side of the Ides you were born. But all Pisceans will be affected by the powerful lunar eclipse on Wednesday night, which takes place so close to your Neptune ruler you can practically feel the moon's magic seep through your pores. See your way clear to telling your version of the truth then, so you won't have to lie your way through the weekend.

Donuts and Handcuffs

by Toby Streett

1. What might one expect to find on a 'breakfast special board' at a donut shop?

A) Two donuts, scrambled eggs and toast for $1.99.

B) One donut free with purchase of a large coffee.

C) Buy a dozen donuts, get a bulletproof vest free on your next visit.

2. What might a donut shop offer its customers in addition to donuts?

A) Coffee
B) Orange Juice
C) Handcuffs

It's a short quiz but if you answered (C) on both questions, you're batting .1000. Just don't pull out your baseball bat at the Doughboy Deli and Doughnuts and Police Supply Shop because you're likely to be standing in line next to some of Boston's finest. They'll be the ones cleaning the dough off their trigger finger.

The best-kept secret around the Boston Police Department is the Doughboy, a 14-year-old South Boston donut emporium. But why all this interest in one of a thousand donut shops in the city? Because this one sells police supplies. They've only been doing it for about six months, but business has been great. Owner Paul Barry knows a good idea when he gets it. "That's right...Where else can you buy a bulletproof vest, a honey-dipped donut and a coffee in the same place?" chorts Barry, obviously eager to talk about his unusual shop.

Discarding some of the more obvious explanations for such an idea, I asked Barry what inspired him to add a police supply area. He replied, "One word: the Economy. It answers the question of how a businessman survives today?"

Exactly why is the Doughboy so special? Well, first and most obvious, it provides law enforcement officers with a time-saving combination of a place to grab a bite and stock up on supplies - all without having to wander far from their squad cars. Second, according to Barry, "We are the only place in the United States to do this. In fact, Doughboy has just been confirmed as the only entry of its class in the Guinness Book of World Records." And for good reason. A mindboggling 400 cops a day frequent his shop.

One officer, who preferred to remain anonymous, said that he feels safe coming here. It's hard NOT to feel safe when the first five people in line are wearing gun belts. He added that Barry has the best prices in town. That's important when you consider that a large portion of the cost of supplies comes out of the officers' own pockets.

FREE BOSTON!

A GUIDE TO FREE AND DISCOUNT ACTIVITIES IN THE BOSTON AREA

by Jason Gregoricus

Rising from the infernal pit of economic recession is the seething stench of leisurely limitation. Where once, in Reagan days of lore, when many of the wanting danced and frolicked in the asphalt jungle, when the need for lively diversion was sated by the gregarious many, now resides only the black residue, the folly of supply-side economics. In these days of our fair city almost everything costs money; the nymphs have departed; the harlequins are sad. But even with these heavy days there lingers in the glances of the shadowed public a glimmer of hope, a grey light in the morning sky. The strapped, the checkless, the poor can still in their scant moments find those jewels of leisure without impairing their nickle-supply.

The Improper Bostonian, champion of the tired, the poor, the downtrodden, is working for all you who have not that ticket price in your pocket, who live from day to day and whim to whim. Our meager resources have been actively seeking the discounted, the inexpensive, the free in this fair town's stalwart institutions. So before you are left funless, unentertained and intelectually famished we give you this small listing. Rise up! The enjoyment is there; league with us and READ ON:

Handicapped Parking in Brookline Sound familiar? 861 KQW blue two door rag top BMW. What kind of sadist would cut me off to take my handicapped parking spot in the pouring rain

It's the effort that counts. To my neighbor with the hack saw and the blow torch: It's an admirable gesture, but it doesn't work. I tried it. Just pay the ticket.

Thanks a whole hell of a lot for that goddam set of roses, Bill, you really know how to make a girl smile. I hate you for what you've done don't ever come by here looking for me again. Laura

To my neighbors who keep me up every night with that annoying electric guitar. Please go to hell.

Lisa S. You were great last night. Sorry but we can't ever be seen in public. Please forgive me.

Jan, who was that gargantuan I saw you with last night. You looked so adorable feeding him "Mr. Choo-Choo Spoon." Marry him? Just set him in front of the TV and let him drool.

Doug, You lying sack of shit. If you ever do that to my dog again I'll beat the living shit out of you with a baseball bat.

Amy, I know you slept with Bob last night. If f ever see either of you two together I'll kill both of you.

No harm done! Gee Stan. don't know how to thank you! thought a simple thanks would suffice but I was wrong. So anyway, thanks for leaving my car on empty; thanks for making the long distant calls on my phone; and thanks so much for leaving your dirty socks all over the house.

Two Balls That's right. I'm that had two balls left on my table Two cue balls after you nit yours onto my table and kept staring at me You ruined my game and I lost a $50 bet with my friend because of you

Thanks for the note but I don't date assholes. Do the world a favor and donate your brain to science.

John M. You can go to hell with your late hours of work, I've had it with your damn office antics, please stay the hell away from me or I'll quit.

To the asshole that cut me off on the corner of Brookline and Harvard last week, lic 534HYU I have your plate and so does everyone else in my fraternity.

You work hard, you play hard, you give everything you've got to your job, and all you get is a damn bunch of roses on secretary's day. Life sucks.

John, I was just kidding, you don't look like Peewee Herman.

I love you Sarah, but that was last night.

Jimmy, thanks for giving us the keys for the Whaler, we ran into a little problem up at Grave's light. But don't worry, Scituate marine salvage is taking care of everything. Sorry dude. Your pals, Oogie, Slapp and Whiney.

Pia, I adore ya You're so young and innocent looking, too bad your name is also a verb.

Rey, is it true what they say about your invisible friend?

Mike, Just thought you'd want to know that I finally cleaned our closet. I wasn't sure if you wanted to keep the golf clubs and hockey equipment, so I burned them. Hope you don't mind. At least now I can find my shoes in the morning Deb.

Warning, Bob B is the biggest slut in the whole town of Newton, stay clear if you know what is good for you.

Gerry, sorry I didn't wake you up this morning. You looked so lovely sleeping on your cold pizza.

Gary, "well. . . ookay", - High-school "Oooh! Aaah!" - College. "Oh God yes! Fill me like a gas station, Conan!" - Honeymoon "White! I think I'll paint the ceiling white." - Last Night. Sincerely Cheryl.

You know how I spell relief? I go out and break your car windows. So turn down your goddam radio and chit chat at three in the morning you guys in apartment 4 on Comm Ave. Yeah you know who I am.

Bob Mc is is true you haven't talked to Sam in some time? I guess we all have our dry spells.

Matt N. They say you're more bean than big.

Cindy, remember when I told you I used a condom. . . well I lied.

I feel like dancing! Oh sweet Regina. We met at the New England Leo Sayer Fan Club and my heart started beating again. But then I started dancing with you. Now I want to put your feet in visegrips, stick slats of bamboo under your toenails, make myself a turkey club and watch you sweat.

Don't worry uncle Teddy, I told her my name was Smith.

Cindarella, you really did turn into a pumpkin last night I thought that happened only in the story books. Ciao.

Dr Rolaids you know that hemorrhoid problem, well now it has spread to my feet. Thanks for the prescriptions. Sincerely, Sue U Lader.

Rich, love me tender, love me true, if I see you with that girl again, I will castrate you.

Mad Mike I slept in your bed last night with your one and only, have fun cleaning those sheets.

Louise, why'd you leave me? Was it the mustard on my tie? The chive in my smile? Or was it the "if you've gotten this far you must be cute" written on my jockeys?

But a Bing! to the Dice impersonator at Fanueil Hall last night you know that pig you picked up at the bar? So does everybody else in Boston.

Tammi, nice dew, you slut.

I need a job. Ex-Boston area communications dean needs work. I'm currently teaching but no one comes to my classes. I'm 5'9", 164 lbs. with big, black circles under my eyes. I am also a famous author, developed the polio vaccine and built the mighty pyramids.

Raul, I don't love you and my mother does not have a "hot set of hooters."

Deb, why do they call you the viper?

B.J. is that a Banana in your pocket or are you just glad to see me?

Josh, what the hell kind of Half Baked idea is that, you're getting a job?

Hey Bill, I know what you did last summer. . .

Calling all the women from the Salem, Beverly, and Peabody areas: Beware of a tall dark, handsome guy bearing gifts from his loins. You can't return them. Sincerely, a safe sex advocate.

Carey, you said you didn't mind when I played in your flower bed as long as I washed the sheets. Right?

Mr Sweeny, when you said to have your daughter home by twelve, you didn't specify pm. Spike. P.S. You're an asshole none the less. Sorry Laura, I couldn't resist.

Tom, don't you think it's about time that you went on a diet? Dude, you and your four chins, your disgusting cigarette breath and your B.O. need a serious vacation. Take a shower and get a little self-respect.

Brendan, If you keep using it at the rate that you do. It will fall off. Love Monique.

To my one and only true lifetime love of all Steven. It must have been another life. I hate you.

Dukakis in '92, the Massachusetts Miracle 2. 1/2 The Smell is near.

How's it hangin now Keith, you had to do it, didn't you?

We know a woman, she's about 5'4", brown hair, brown eyes and a smile that could scare a buzzard off a shit wagon. And she went home with Carl last night.

By, the way Kevin. You've been wondering why it's been such a dry season, we'll keep going around your dorm talking about how long its been and see how many girls come pounding your door down.

How's your car Bill? Remember when the engine started, the paint didn't have key marks and the tires weren't slashed? Look out your window. Have a nice day.

Silver is the big investment in the 90's, yeah right.

Wanted: work in a stimulating environment with high pay, nice co workers and good benefits with a good chance for advancement. Please call 532-4444 if you have any information where this can be found.

Manny, send lawyers, guns and money, the s*#% has hit the fan.

Steve, I don't know how to tell you this. We've known each other for so long. Best friends. We've shared laughter, tears, beers and so much more. And now we've shared something even more intimate. Cindy! Sorry dude. It was late and I was horny. Still buds? Jeff.

For information on how to get out of DWI violations, call Steve at 627-3429

Jonathan, why were there 59 900 calls to Kerry's Kinky Inc. on your phone bill last month?

To my Delta brothers, I think I may have solved the mystery of the missing social funds. By the way, I'm having a great time in the Riviera. See you all next semester. Love .....you know who.

Catherine. Was it true, I can't believe it, you lost what last weekend!?!

Larkins, I'm sorry, no pictures this time, I'll try to work something in soon though. Mark

Mareeeeelizabeth, tend them pigs. And tell that McDevitt boy to go on home.

To Michelle, the woman with the whiney voice and the fat toes, I met you at Anne Taylor last week, you're the one who spilled the Heath Bar Crunch ice cream all over the 1,000 dollar red linnen dress, the security guards caught me by accident, but it was worth the romp in the mattress dept at Bloomie's just the same. Craig.

Teacher next door, you when you thought I was a surgeon you kissed my butt, but when you realized I was only the boyfriend you turned into a bitch. Thank's a lot.

Courtney, cow tipping was a great way to spend a first date. Let's try milking next time. Huh?

Camy, the milkman left in tears, the postman always rings twice and the garbage man keeps forgetting to take out the trash. What's your secret.

To Ronnie, we're sending this message from New York, congratulations on your engagement. I hope you enjoy the Orgasmatron, at least this will never let you down even if Bob does. Love Shawn and Michelle.

To the Boyfriend who needs a shave, haircut, a tan and ten pounds, get your ass in gear or I'm heading to RIO solo.

Dearest Kristin, the pickle went sour, I know for sure. Anonymous.

Mary Anne, the inseam woman, dami un bocchino, or we can just go for cappucc. The choice is yours, sincerely, 12".

Robbie, the FCC seized all your assets while you were away. Sorry, I shouldn't have sold the report

Hey Laddy, why do they call you that anyway?

Dear Elizabeth, your psychos will come to torture your thoughts forever, but at least you haven't become one of them yet. But sometimes I wonder.

Hey Steve, your bird won't fly no more. My cat had him for lunch.

To John, you think I don't know. But I do. You thought you had covered all your tracks and left no clues, but unfortunately you weren't as smart as you thought you were. You will come to wish that you were more careful. I'll make very sure of it. Your loving wife.

Dear Harry, I can't stand the clogged drains and the shedding on the carpet, and my friends always think you always wear a fur coat.

Sharon, (world's worst joke teller) remember always for the future to place napkin over the drink to get drunk. Don't worry, Steve will always be a phone call away, to explain all to you that you don't understand. Love the Cookie Monster. P.S. Don't forget to send me the chocolate chip cookies from Atlantic City.

I can't tell a lie, Mike did it.

Jane, sorry I missed you when I was in Boston, I hope this note gets to you sometime soon. Rob.

Hey neighbor. You live on Newbury St. You have a dog. A very, very ugly dog who likes to crap on my doorstep every morning. Next time, I'm going to shoot that mut of yours.

Cuddles Welcome home to the good 'ole USA We missed you alot, but now your here to stay, so now lets celebrate the old fashioned way. Bisuteki's eh?

I'm desperately seeking information on a young woman named Tammy with sultry green eyes. I'm not sure where she comes from but I,d climb the highest mountain,swim the deepest sea for her to be with me. Any information 1-900-hot4-you.

Miriam, from the moment I met you I knew you would be the one to fill that empty space that longed within my heart. You have an inner beauty that radiates like a beacon in the night. Sweet buns loves ya!!

Dear Killer, I know you haven't been faithful to me and it wasn't a little birdie who told me. It was the bitch you've been messing around with. AstaLavista BABY!! You're history.

Welcome to The Improper Bostonian.

We're young. We're bold. We're the new entertainment and leisure news-magazine that's about to take Boston by storm.

Addressing the needs of the oft-neglected 18 to 35 year old generation, a people who take their play as seriously as their work, our paper is written, photographed, edited and published by young Bostonians.

We do one thing and we do it well. Extensive entertainment coverage is provided for you in a style that makes it fun and easy to read. In each issue, you'll find highlights of upcoming attractions, notable reviews and exhaustive listings.

As the largest bi-weekly in the Greater Boston area, 80,000 issues will be distributed every two weeks. Look for upcoming issues in our many newsracks and at numerous locations throughout the city.

Best of all, we're free! All this information is available at no cost to you.

In the future, we hope you will rely on The Improper Bostonian as your most comprehensive and enjoyable source of entertainment news.

Read on and enjoy.

Sincerely,

Mark Semonian

The Improper Bostonian

There's a revolution brewing in Boston. But this time the battles won't be fought on picturesque Lexington Green or the commanding hills of Charlestown. They will take place right in the heart of the city.

The victims will be staid, sluggish publications that have failed to keep pace with the changing demands of today's consumers. And the victors will be businesses, like yours, that recognize the potential for an easy-reading, comprehensive leisure and entertainment newspaper targeted at the difficult to reach 18 to 35 year old buying group.

Introducing The Improper Bostonian, Boston's bi-weekly leisure and entertainment newspaper ....

Who are we?

The Improper Bostonian is a bi-weekly leisure and entertainment newspaper with a circulation of 80,000.

Who are our readers?

The oft-neglected 18 to 35 post-Baby Boom gencration.

What makes us different?

The Improper Bostonian offers the most comprchcnsive, user-friendly leisure and entertainment listings in the city - in addition to some of the most lively feature articles you'll find anywhere.

Our staff is bold, aggressive - and above all talented. While the recession has been chipping away at your sales, it has afforded us thc opportunity to chose from the most talented pool of journalists this city has seen in decades. Our newsroom is a hub of activity, bustling with eager staff members ready to go the extra mile.

Where can your customers find us in the future?

Readers can pick us up frec at any one of our strategically placed, free-standing newsracks. Copies will also be available at such non-traditional sites as schools, hotels, museums, adult education centers, restaurants, nightclubs, record stores, hair salons, health clubs, and tourist centers.

You may want us to leave a stack of papers at your place of business. The additional foot traffic could translate into significant new sales.

The Improper Bostonian, grow with us .... we're fresh, bold and innovative.

On November 6, highlights include The Tango, Fragments of A Life, Romeo and Juliet, and Pas De Quarte.

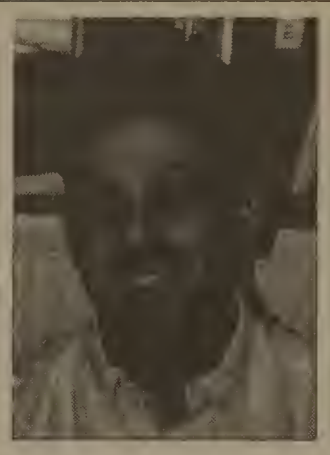
Tickets are still available for the performances. Call the Wang Center box



WOMAN ON THE STREET

Edited by Cathryn Loebs

"IF YOU WON THE LOTTERY, WHAT WOULD YOU DO WITH THE MONEY?"

Karen, 23, "I'd give half...no a quarter of it to my father. With the rest I'd start a wine bar in Tortola."

"Chris, 26, "Being practical, I'd put it all in the bank and live off the interest. I would do more travelling, and if a dream set in, I'd do it."

Caty, 22, "I'd buy myself two golden retriever puppies, hire someone to clean up after them and join Karen in Tortola."

Mark, 27, "Buy an art gallery."

Bea, 29, "I'd retire, buy the Caribbean, make myself Queen and get a tremendous tan. Or I'd travel around the world with some hot babe."

Paul, 36. After paying my bills, I'd have a lot of fun."

BOOKS

AMERICAN STORIES

by Tobin Streett

Calvin Trillin, syndicated columnist and author of fourteen books, including the bestsellers If You Don't Have Something Nice To Say...and Enough's Enough, writes short stories of modern America that are witty, convincing and free of common prolixity. His newest book, American Stories(Simon and Schuster; 294 pages;$19.95), presents twelve non-fiction tales from some of his best work as a writer with the New Yorker. In American Stories, Trillin paints a fresh portrait of America in a collection of narratives that comment on such things as Ben and Jerry's ice cream empire, the diametrically-contrasted lifestyle of new and old in Oregon and the country's only drive-in theater movie critic. Trillin writes like a storyteller reciting a first-time account. Through his dry-wit and acid-laced tongue, he manages to write a funny but obviously reflective collection of essays whose sum portrays a frontier where old America meets new and ex-hippies discover business. Through his sometimes apparently desensitized point of view, Trillin teaches us how to laugh at the world in which we live.

The Improper Tourist

by Greg Sarkisian

Welcome to Boston, America's most historic city. Walk streets that haven't changed since the 19th century. Drink Boston lager from bar stools that once supported America's most famous backsides. Sit and meditate at the graves of people who lost their lives defending the American Way.

Any tour of historic Boston should begin on the Freedom Trail. The Trail connects many of the most significant historical sites in Boston. In fact, it runs through what is arguably the most historic square mile in the United States - downtown Boston. Begin at the Common (America's oldest public park) and continue past Granary Burial Ground (resting place of Paul Revere , Samuel Adams, John Hancock and Mother Goose), Old South Meeting House (departure point for the Sons of Liberty on the night of the Boston Tea Party), Old North Church (where two lanterns were hung on April 18, 1775 to signify that the British were coming "by sea"), Faneuil Hall, the USS Constitution (the world's oldest commissioned battle ship, more commonly known as "Old Ironsides") and Bunker Hill Monument. For more information on the Freedom Trail and other National Parks in and around Boston, call the National Park Service at 242-5642 or visit their office at the corner of Devonshire and State Streets.

If you've still got time left over after walking the trail, you can begin to make a dent in Boston's wealth of museums. The Museum of Fine Arts (465 Huntington Ave., 267-9300) boasts one of the largest collections in the world. Travel from Ancient Egypt to Renaissance Europe in the matter of a day. The Museum of Science (O'Brien Highway just off Storrow Dr., 723-2500) features exhibits on everything from outer space to molecular biology. Also see the Hayden Planetarium and the Mugar Omni Theater, featuring wrap-around cinematography (call 723-2500 for times and ticket info). The New England Aquarium (Central Wharf, 973-5200) houses a four-story glass fish tank, complete with a coral reef and live sharks.

If you're looking for something different, try one of Boston's lesser-known but equally fascinating, smaller museums. The Computer Museum (300 Congress St., 426-2800) will thrust you into the computer age while the Children's Museum (also 300 Congress St., 426-6500) will entertain both the children and adults in your group. Harvard University's Sackler (485 Broadway, Camb., 495-9400) and Fogg (32 Quincy St., Camb., 495-9400) Art Museums display outstanding ancient collections. The John F. Kennedy Library (Columbia Point, 929-4523) offers a beautiful view of the harbor as well as interesting exhibits about Brookline's favorite son.

Now, if all this touring has left you hungry, take a meal where Daniel Webster, Calvin Coolidge and John Kennedy once ate. I'm referring to the Union Oyster House (45 Union St.) and Durgin Park (340 North Mkt., Faneuil Hall Mktpl.) - both on the Freedom Trail. These restaurants were serving good food and drink when Abraham Lincoln was still a small-time lawyer in Illinois.

As you've probably heard, getting around Boston by car is no easy task. But fortunately one of the city's other great assets is its comprehensive transportation system: the T. Did you know that the T offers all-you-can-ride tourist passes good for three and eight days? Call 722-5218 for more information. And remember, all sites mentioned in this section are accessible by the T.

The Caffeine Connection
Touring Boston's Coffee Houses

by Jannette Tucker

Marianne Samposna

At Caffe Pompeii, Coffee fans find great Caffeine late night, but no mobsters.

How would you like to sit down for a steamy cup of java with the band members of the Grateful Dead? Or Steve Martin? Or how about being served coffee and pastries by Bill Cosby? Or if the mood strikes you, a little Italian history in the North End?

Not only is it possible in Boston coffee houses, it happens — all the time.

The Boston coffee culture is thriving like never before. But it's not just the business that's vivacious, it's what goes on within the walls of those shops that's intriguing and captivating. If walls could talk, Boston's cafés would give us a ringside seat to celebrity visits, the launching of musical careers, underground mafia dealings, and even marriages sparking.

Let's face it, discussing the pertinent topics of the day, or gossiping about or even with the latest hero catapulting in popularity, just isn't the same with a coke in hand as it is with a cup of java. Never underestimate the power of a cup of coffee.

If you're looking for history and an honest-to-goodness "Goodfellas" plot look no further than the North End's Caffe Pompei. The coffee house's history is loaded with old-time mafia dealings which have landed more than one mobster in jail.

The 28-year-old restaurant on Hanover Street, named and modeled after Italy's famed volcano city, is still the only coffee shop in the North End that's open until 4 am. "When the clubs are over, you come to Pompei," said supervisor Sammy Bensamir.

Caffe Pompei is famous for its delicious home-made lemon gelato (Italian ice cream). It's so authentic that some stray seeds find their way into the dessert. Pompei also boasts fine Italian coffee. If cappuccino is your favored way to take caffeine, this is the place. Given such a generous shake of chocolate sprinkles, you can smell the chocolate well before the cappuccino reaches your table.

The decor is dark and genuine Italian. There's nothing visually noteworthy except the little volcano in back, commemorating the restaurant's namesake. The red and white checkered tablecloths are the first giveaway that this is a purely Italian establishment. If you look closely, you'll hear the shopkeepers speaking Italian and see them kissing their uncles on both cheeks.

The decor may be dark but the history of the shop is even darker. Caffe Pompei used to be owned by the infamous Anguillo family, the ringleaders of Boston's mafia for many years before they were thwarted by prison terms for as long as 45 years.

According to the jury that convicted Danny Anguillo in 1986, Anguillo conducted many of his mafia dealings in the back room of the coffee shop, which was at the time a well-known mob hang-out. Because of those dealings, Caffe Pompei forfeited 25% of their building's ownership to the government.

But that's not all this coffee shop has in its closet. Caffe Pompei used to be the after-hours place. Said one Pompei frequenter of the past, if you asked for your coffee "just right," you might get a splash of Sambuca in it at 3 am to spice up the rest of your night. Dealings such as these led to many raids by the Boston police for serving liquor illegally, although Pompei's license was never suspended. Most of the mafia members who made Caffe Pompei a regular stop in their day are now in jail, leaving the shop replete with stories but clean of any current wrong-doings.

If mob dealings aren't quite your scene, maybe being served coffee and pastries by super-actor Bill Cosby is. Caffe Vittoria serves cappuccino to so many celebrities that owner, David Riccio documents those visits by photographs and displays them on the walls. If you look closely you will even discover visual proof of Bill Cosby's brief encounter with waitering.

Cosby is a frequent visitor of Caffe Vittoria, located down the street from Caffe Pompei on Hanover Street. He's a regular customer of mine," Riccio said of Cosby. "That doesn't mean he's in all of the time, but when he's in town, he always comes in. And one time he got so worked up and enjoyed it so much that he started serving my customers!" "Other regular customers that add spice to Caffe Vittoria include; famed singers Enrico Caruso and Frankie Avalon, and Archbishop, Bernard Law.

Caffe Vittoria, the first Italian coffee house to set up shop in the North End, opened its doors for business 85 years ago. Buzzing with activity nightly, tourists from all over the country flock here to find out if the good things they have heard about Vittoria are true —they are!

When you walk in, friendly chatter abounds, giving you a happy feeling. The bright, cheerful decor paves the way for amicable happenings. Every customer will immediately notice the antique coffee makers lined along the walls. "Those are the original coffee makers from when my grandfather opened the store," said fourth-generation owner David Riccio. "They're all straight from Italy. People love them; that's what gives this place its character."

Old photographs of the North End's yesteryear add to the purely Italian and friendly charm of this caffe. Sleek marble tables, brass, and glass all make the place shine, especially at night after a long dinner. A great follow up to dinner is a cup of their self-proclaimed "best cappuccino in town."

"Although Riccio is flattered that celebrities are regular frequenters of his coffee house, he also enjoys the day-to-day grind of owning a family-run business. The store opens at 8 am, and first thing in the morning, Riccio and his brother Gerald are up, making fresh canoli every day, seven days a week, 365 days a year. "There is such a demand for us to stay open all of the time," Riccio said without a hint of regret in his voice about his never closing. "I want to do it for my customers."

The Harvard Bookstore Café is another Boston coffee shop where the locals can brush elbows with the famous. In fact, The Grateful Dead, recently in town for a week-long stay at the Boston Garden, made an appearance at this Café. Other celebs, like Steve Martin, have also taken their cup of coffee within the walls of this bookstore and restaurant.

It has been reported that "anyone" who is in town for a concert will ultimately take a journey down to the Harvard Bookstore Café. "We have a lot of celebrities come to our restaurant," admitted Pierre Jospe who, along with Monsef Meddeb, owns and operates the restaurant portion of the café. In addition to nationally-known stars, it is also a favorite among the local television anchors and reporters,

Local artists also favor the bookstore, and you'll often find one or two of them drawing a sketch or two — perhaps of you? — while partaking in a cup of coffee.

If you have $800 to spare, check out the watercolors gracing the walls of the coffee house. (That's without the frames).

"It's the spot (Newbury Street), so we sometimes get a very sophisticated crowd," Jospe added. "You hear a lot of languages spoken here." This is precisely half the fun of visiting this restaurant. You're likely to hear French being spoken on one side of the table and quantum physics discussed on the other. The fun is guessing what they're talking about, especially if the topic is physics.

It is precisely this elitist atmosphere that makes the Harvard Bookstore Café the perfect place to write in your diary if you want to give yourself the illusion of being a mental gymnast. Intelligent thoughts seem to seep into your mind and you'll think yourself oh so worldly.

Not only can you challenge your mind, you can also get a fab cup of coffee in the process. Their "Harvard Bookstore Café Blend" is fine enough for a quick jolt, but they also offer a variety of espressos and cappuccinos well worth the time to enjoy. The restaurant will tempt your sweet tooth with a variety of cakes and tortes to help the coffee go down more smoothly.

The Café is also perfect for reading, which is what the whole place is about. Eat, drink, be merry, and read a book. "There are people who come in for coffee and grab a book from the shelf and really get into it and end up lingering for an hour and a half," Jospe said.

This in-house entertainment in the form of books is encouraged at the Harvard Bookstore Café, especially up front where most of the tables seat one or two people, perfect for delving into conversation or the latest John Irving masterpiece.

However, if the eyes are tired and the brain needs a rest, prick up your ears and head to Passim Coffee Shop and Gallery on Palmer Street in Harvard Square. Passim is the place to be for the folk scene in Boston. Donlin said she doesn't so see any resurgence in coffee houses lately since, according to her, "they never quite died out. The folk coffee houses have always been very active."

In fact, folk music is more alive here than in most cities. Owned for the past 22 years by Ray Anne Donlin and her husband Bob, Passim's specializes in acoustic, contemporary folk. Says, Ray Anne,"We get a mix of up-and-coming local talent as well as the better-known, national artists in the folk world."

"This area is like the Mecca of the folk community," Donlin said. "There are a lot of little, non-profit coffee houses that provide the opportunity to play, but they aren't commercial." Donlin said her club's entrance into the folk community was more the result of demand than anything else. She explained that Passim's location was once occupied by the famous Club 47, a premier folk club. When that club shut its doors permanently, "the folk musicians were homeless. Musicians kept coming in and asking us if they could play after we opened up. So it was almost forced upon us."

The brick decor perfectly suits this earthy restaurant where the cappuccino tends to need a lot of sugar, but once it's sweetened just right, you can sit back and enjoy the atmosphere and perhaps a raspberry croissant. Handmade earrings and other jewelry which are for sale during the day, hang on the walls and offer themselves as decorations during the night time, giving the place a Sixties, bohemian look. If someone lit a stick of incense, they would fit right into this grass-roots coffee house that is the center of the folk community in Boston.

Passim features live folk music Thursday through Sunday during the winter months. Regulars of Passim might remember Suzanne Vega of "Luka" fame climbing her way to the top of the charts via this tiny, quaint, serene basement. Others still might remember Tracy Chapman playing there while studying at Tufts University. Other folk heros, such as John Gorka and Patty Larkin have also played a few notes in their time at Passim. Who knows what new greats may play?

You'll find plenty of "sweetmoments" and good conversation at Il Dolce Momento

Music and entertainment certainly aren't the only things that create atmosphere for a coffee house. Il Dolce Momento on Charles Street in the heart of Beacon Hill, is evidence that sometimes atmosphere and good coffee are enough.

Il Dolce Momento specializes in serving European-bowl-size cups of coffee that keep that conversation brewing for just a little while longer. Try the Caffe Viennese, a mix of espresso and American coffee served with a luscious scoop of whipped cream.

The walls are brick, decorated with large fresco paintings which add a splash of color to the earth-toned room, whisking you across the Atlantic to an Italian caffe. "I almost want to say it's old-fashioned," said manager Terri Smith. "but that doesn't quite explain it. It's really casual and it's a good place to sit and talk."

There's an obvious social air here which facilitates conversation and relaxation. In fact, one of their banner times of day is right after work when everyone can use some little "Sweet Moments" of their own. And what makes a sweet moment better than home-made gelato? Il Dolce Momento whips up their own and Smith claims it's the best in the area.

One of Il Dolce Momento's claim to fame is that they offer a comfortable place for Europeans to stop in. "We get a lot of Europeans in here," she said. "This is one of the only places in the area that they come and hang out. All of our pastries and coffees are European, so I guess they feel right at home. "The owner lived in Italy before he came here," she explained, "and he wanted it to be just like Italy."

Smith said she definitely sees new life in the coffee house culture in recent years.

"People want a place where they just come and hang out," she said. "They want service, but they don't want to be bothered. And it's becoming trendy. People want to come, bring their friends, and talk over coffee."

Talking over coffee is precisely what has sparked many a marriage within the walls of The Coffee Connection, says founder George Howell. Howell said he has made a concerted effort to make his coffee houses "warm, exciting, and beautiful places," with more than a pleasant atmosphere.

At Harvard Square, coffee drinkers will find on the walls the yarn art of Tutukila, a Huichol Indian whose work Howell used to exhibit. It's a mythological panel that displays the creation of lightning; the final panel shows a bolt of lightning striking down a bull.

When Howell and company open their Newbury Street coffee house in November, they will further develop their artistic theme. Most stores, including those in Lexington, Wellesley and Coolidge Corner, will feature free community art walls where local artists can showcase and rotate their works from Coffee Connection to Coffee Connection. The best of these works will be rewarded by being hung in the Newbury Street store at the end of the circuit.

And don't forget about that coffee! Coffee Connection places so much importance on their coffee that they discontinued their extensive food menu and replaced much of their eatables with coffee choices. And what a selection they have! This Café has just about every kind of coffee on earth- 30 varieties that range from traditional French Costa Rican and Columbian blends to the more exotic coffee of Papua New Guinea, Yemen Mocha Mattari and even the rare and costly Jamaican Blue Mountain coffee.

They do it right, and you can taste the difference in the coffee. The mochaccino made with heaps of melted chocolate (not syrup) is divine. Their café au lait is laced with fresh hand-whipped cream.

Offering such cordial atmosphere and exquisite coffee, it's not surprising many marriages have sparked within the confines of his coffee houses. "It happens all the time," Howell said, with a hint of pride in his voice at inadvertently providing such a service.

"It's everyone getting married," he continued. "It's our managers, people working for us, our customers. Back in the Seventies I worked in the Harvard Square store and I would hear from the couples themselves about how they met there." Howell proudly proclaims, "Coffee houses are ideal places for people to meet and for strangers to strike up conversations with each other."

Never underestimate the power of a cup of coffee.

Haunted Boston

by Tobin Streett & Rey Roldan

Is Boston haunted? The existence of the ghost world has always been a widely debated topic in history. Shakespeare's Macbeth was visited by the ghost of his father. Poet Percy Bysshe Shelley was haunted by apparitions in a castle, the same one which inspired his wife Mary Wollstonecraft to write the masterpiece Frankenstein. Native Americans speak of the spirit world that gives elders and medicine men their wisdom and strength to overcome great struggles. The Bible bases a lot on spirits, ghosts and other dimensions known as Heaven and Hell. So why the recent lapse in the netherworld? Man's quest for empirical knowledge has caused him to dismiss intangibles and abstractions, thereby dismissing parapsychology (the study of the supernatural) and other imperfect sciences as a legitimate study. Now, however, as forensics and other abstract sciences gain in popularity, it's just a matter of time for parapsychology to follow suit.

Dudleytown is one place where supernatural phenomena are believed to occur as frequently as inflation. Located in the northwest corner of Connecticut on the outskirts of Cornwall, it was once a flourishing town in the mid 1600's where grass grew and birds sang. But curiously, there was a certain evil that lurked not in the woods that surrounded Dudleytown, but within the village itself . . . and its inhabitants. It started at first with bizarre accidents.

The wife of Herman Swift, a general under George Washington, was struck by lightning and instantly killed. Swift himself returned to the town and ultimately went insane from being attacked by ghosts.

Mary Cheney, wife of Horace Greeley (famous for saying "Go West, young man," and little else), had to escape the terror that she believed existed in her hometown. Some reported seeing creatures that weren't fully human nor animal while others saw ghosts of dead loved ones. Still others were victims to horrific sights of headless horsemen, phantom stagecoaches and mutilated and butchered bodies that still walked the area. Soon the Dudleytownfolk themselves were dying through violent and mysterious deaths. Most of the murders occurred at night around the town, but it wasn't uncommon for someone to go insane and attack his own family at home. For villagers, it became an everyday occurrence to stumble upon human remains which were burned, hacked, bludgeoned, poisoned, or mutilated in some horrid way. With a sudden burst of common sense, the last few survivors finally fled the helltown but not without telling anyone their stories of ghosts, half men, half beasts and other scary tales. Decades later, other people tried to settle the land despite the rumors. They suffered similar fates. Eventually, state officials realized that it was time to close Dudleytown and they took it off the map permanently in 1949.

Nearly three hundred years later, the stories still persist and so do the crumbling foundations of Dudleytown. Located on a desolate mountainside populated with "No Trespassing" signs, a foreboding sense of evil is present in the air. On the trail to Dudleytown, birds chirped, flowers blossomed and a gentle breeze slipped through the woods. Once in town limits, however, (you can tell by the remains of a stone wall that once surrounded the village) not a single creature can be sighted (save for the annoying buzz of gnats and mosquitoes - messengers of evil looking for some sacrificial blood, perhaps?). The woods are eerily quiet, like when trying to sleep in a new atmosphere when everything's too quiet. The whole area is like a desert in the woods - no trace of any plants or animals except for trees whose branches are far above the desolate ground. There's an ominous feeling of being watched, that someone or something is hiding behind a tree, watching your every move.

It's no wonder the villagers of Dudleytown never felt safe from evil because this place has the uncanny resemblance to a Friday the 13th movie. If you were on screen, the audience would be screaming at you to get the hell out of the woods. Locals from nearby towns know all about Dudleytown and believe it's a sinister place. A hiker who tends bar at the Hawk's Nest Pub in Cornwall made several trips there and has "seen a lot of scary stuff. You know, Headless horsemen-type of stuff." Parents tell their children to stay away from that part of the mountainside because "a lot of weirdos hang out up there." Ed and Lorraine Warren, world renowned demonologists and psychic investigators, have devoted a chapter in their book Ghost Hunters about the town and report about a case where a boy was attacked by "a beast [who] had eyes the color of blood and breath so foul the boy had to hold his own breath for most of the struggle."

> "If you were on the screen, the audience would be screaming at you to get the hell out of the woods"

One recent explanation for the Dudleytown mysteries is the high lead content in the stream that runs through the town. Theorists believe the townsfolk used the leaded water without realizing its danger and thus suffered insanity from its consumption. While this could vouch for the deaths caused by lead poisoning and some cases of brain damage, it doesn't account for the numerous apparitions that have been sighted in the last three hundred years. It doesn't account for the disembodied voices that occasionally find themselves on tape recorders and video cameras of people who have investigated Dudleytown for some proof of the supernatural. And it doesn't account for recent reports that have been printed in local press such as the The New Milford Times.

Cases like this don't just occur out in the woods in places faraway. Because of large populations and high death rates, cities like Boston have high incidence rates for hauntings and other supernatural occurrences. Due to its age and history, Boston would seem to be a likely candidate for spiritual infestations. An Emerson dorm in the Back Bay has supposedly banned the use of Ouija boards. The Lowdown on Dudleytown Planning on some weekend ghostbusting? Dudleytown, Connecticut has one of the highest rates of supernatural activity this side of the Mississippi. Be careful. Seriously.

Getting there is easy:

Take the Mass. Pike West to Route 84 West, to Route 7 North until you hit Cornwall. At the intersection of Routes 4 and 7. . . you'll notice a thickening of the air and an absence of life. When your car breaks down on that dark and desolate road, you'll know you're there.

Ministeri and Daniel Baer, PhD., professor of Psychology and expert on Altered Consciousness, have backed up the claim that "spiritual activity has been occurring in that Emerson dorm quite frequently in the past few years." This spirit infestation manifests itself through sudden emotional changes in the people who live there and occasionally as apparitions.

"It's no secret that the Emerson Majestic Theater was the last place for Houdini to perform," said Scott Ratzan, a spokesperson for Emerson College. "The sounds of chains dropping to the floor of the stage are frequently heard." According to Ratzan, however, that is not the only unexplainable peculiarity of the building. Theater manager Brooks Russell experiences supernatural events frequently. Russell, who is often present in the theater after midnight, feels no fear or danger by his ghostly companions. "They're good ghosts and they don't hurt anybody. But they do like to play tricks." He went on to say that his musical director plays showtunes on piano from Of Thee I Sing, a Gershwin musical that debuted at the Majestic in 1932. While playing them, he often hears the sounds of people rising from their seats in the second balcony. Movement around the theater is normal when shows are being rehearsed except there's one problem: the second balcony has been closed for years!

It's a strange world we live in and many mysteries are unfolded everyday. Some people search for the "Meaning of Life," while others search for the "Meaning of Death." We hope to uncover that which exists in between and bring this otherworldly topic closer to home because the paranormal doesn't just happen to "other people." If you know of a local haunt, have a story to tell or want to send us your comments, please do. We'd like to hear from you. But remember, not everything that goes bump in the night is a poltergeist. Who knows, it could be a demon.

DINING

The Moveable Feast

by Al Stankus

Dining in deluxe surroundings, eating the likes of terrine, rack of lamb, and souflee, while drinking a perfectly-aged Chambertin, can be worth the money. But it's rightfully a lot of money.

On the flip side, what if you could eat fare that includes duck confit, grilled flank steak, shrimp in garlic cream, and tart tartin, prepared by the same chef who has a hand in the first menu, and have a complete dinner for either $14 or $20?

Pack up your skepticism, because this scenario describes the dual setting that takes place Monday through Saturday at Maison Robert.

Since 1958, Lucien and Ann Robert, first at Maitre Jacques on Berkeley Street and later in the Charles River Park complex, and now in their namesake establishment located in Old City Hall, have worked to keep the flame of traditional cuisine Francaise alive in Boston.

Ben's Cafe,
in Maison Robert
45 School Street, Boston
227-3370
Prixe fixe dinner,
Mon-Sat. 5:30-10 pm
All major credit cards accepted
Reservations preferred
There is a flight of narrow stair leading to Ben's Cafe.

The upper section of the restaurant, Bonhomme Richard, houses the spacious main dining room. High-ceilinged and gracious, the space was once the office of the City Treasurer. A menu of highly-executed classic French cuisine fits the surroundings. And prices are commensurate with the service, setting and fare, meaning that for most, Bonhomme Richard is reserved for special nights.

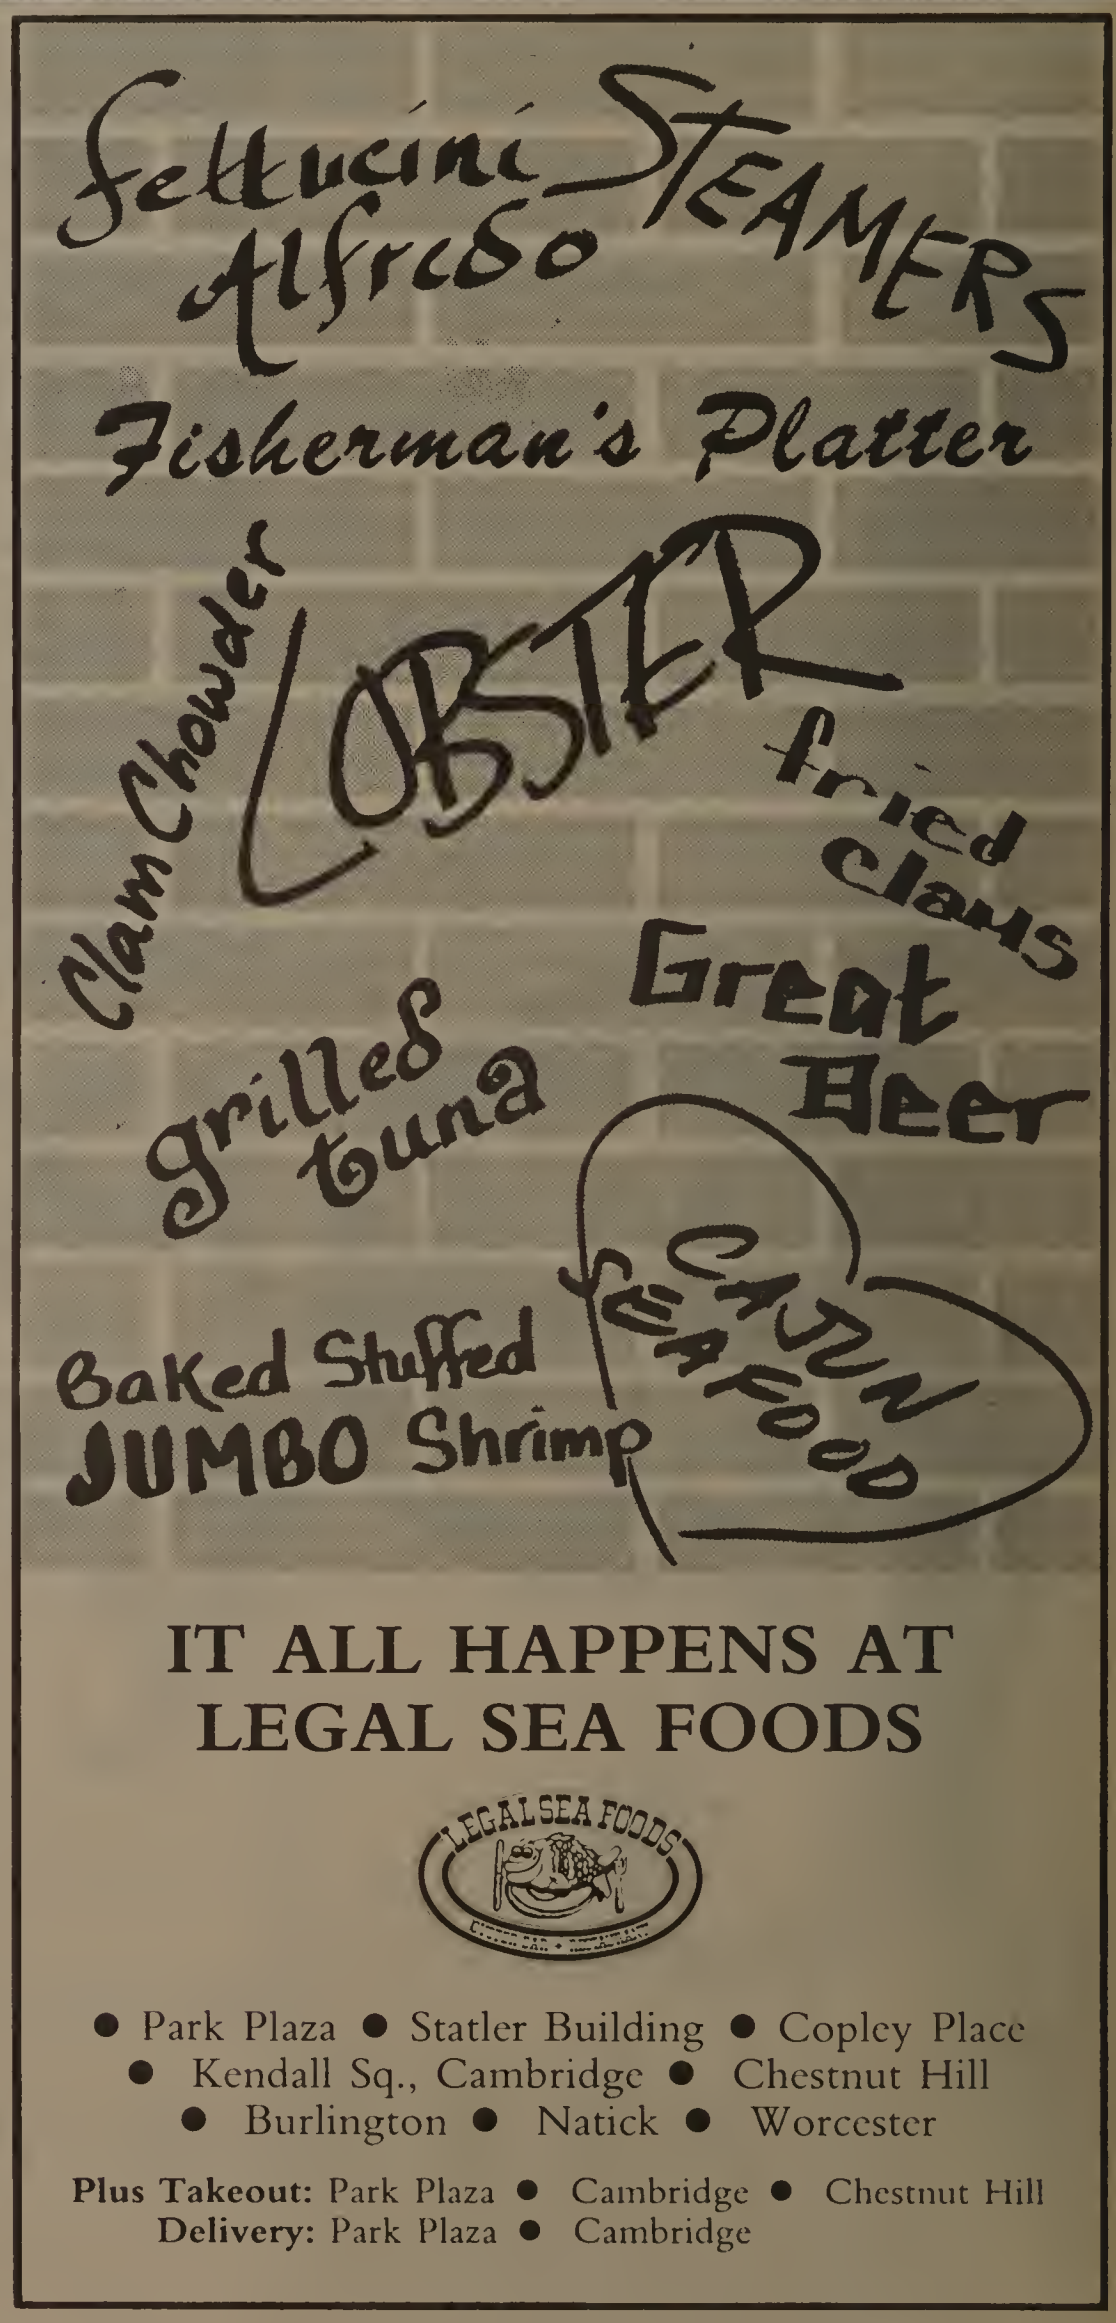
However, for the past few years, the downstairs Ben's Cafe, thanks to the urging of Andree Robert, Robert's daughter and chef, offers two prix-fixe menus ($14 or $20; surprisingly, coffee and tea are $1.75 extra) as well as a list of reasonably-priced and well-chosen French wines ($10-$15 a bottle).

A personal axiom concerning French food is, when in doubt choose the red meat. A hallmark of the French is their ability to turn simple cuts almost sublime and raise prime cuts to unknown heights. The former is what the kitchen servicing Ben's Cafe did with flank steak.

An entree choice of the $14 dinner (others include grey sole with shrimp in cream sauce and goat cheese-stuffed chicken breast), the meat was marinated in a mix of herbs, olive oil, and a little soy sauce. Grilled to medium-rare as ordered, a fan of slices was sauced with a rich stock reduction mixed with bits of wild mushrooms. The steak, beguilingly tender, yet still with a forceful taste, provided example to the axiom.

From the $20 dinner, les crevettes grilles Provencales, grilled shrimp with garlic butter, were slightly marred by two shrimp that were somewhat strong tasting, which edifies the tricky nature of working with a product that's been previously frozen.

Broiled, and still with some succulence, the five jumbo shrimp sat in a wonderfully intense garlic cream sauce slightly thickened with butter. Steamed potatoes provided the starch, while the flank steak came with some outstanding mashed potatoes. Both plates contained sides of sauteed snow peas and a mix of summer squash and zucchini.



For the first course, the sorrell soup, in what tasted like a very rich chicken stock, obviously had something else (maybe pureed peas?) in it that reduced the usual bitter taste of the herb. It was a dish that epitomized the "less is more" style of cooking. Our other first courses, duck confit came in a small ramekin filled with shredded duck, rich in both texture and flavor from being preserved in its own fat. The confit was served with triangles of crunchy garlic toast.

The salad course, a mix of greens dressed in a traditional vinaigrette, had what some may find to be an abundance of overly-strong, spicy-tasting arugula. Others might call it tangy.

Less prone to debate are the desserts that are part of the prix-fixe menu. With the lesser-priced dinner, one can choose from poached pears in red wine or a lovely chocolate mousse; while the other half of the menu allows one to choose the restaurant's signature tart tartin, an upside apple tart of exquisite properties. Intense, smooth, and bursting with flavor, the ample slice is served with chantilly cream.

The restaurant houses a magnificent wine cellar, and choices include well-aged Bordeauxs, specials like a 71 Chateau Margaux ($65), drinkable Burgundies such as the '82 Vosne Romanee from Daniel Rion ($45), in addition to some serviceable house wines ($10-$15).

While the menu is fixed, the staff can arrange (for an additional fee) to have appetizers and/or desserts from the upstairs menu substituted. However, to this way of thinking, this seems to run counter to the spirit of true prix fixe dining.

BUDGET BITES

JOSEPH'S AQUARIUM

by Meg Worden & K.B. Williams

Times are tough, and finding somewhere to eat that is both decent and affordable can be something of a challenge. Sometimes when you eat at a cheap restaurant, you wish you hadn't bothered, and other times, the food is fine, but let's face it, it's not the sort of place to take someone special. Recognizing this, we have set out to discover where you can get the best value for money at the lowest possible prices. Ideally, we would like to find somewhere really nice where you can have a complete meal (excluding drinks) for $10, but because good places like that are few and far between, we are also going to look at some of the bargains being offered in unexpected places, where, by judicious ordering, you can still dine out modestly and well for between $10.00 and $15.00.

Joseph's Aquarium
111 Atlantic Ave,Boston
523-4000.
Open daily for lunch and dinner.
All major. credit cards accepted
Handicapped accessible.

Lobster lovers take note - we have found just the place for you. Forget about skyrocketing prices; forget about uncomfortably crowded dining rooms where you feel you have outstayed your welcome if you spend longer than thirty minutes; forget about trailing out to the suburbs for bargain priced crustaceans - one of the best deals is available right here in Boston at Joseph's Aquarium. Here, not only can you find lobsters at reasonable prices, but you also get to eat them in civilized surroundings.

The large square dining room (seating 280) has windows on two sides and booths on a third side. The tables are a generous size, and nicely spaced, while the gently suffused turquoise lighting creates a comfortable aura throughout. The uniformed waitstaff provide prompt and courteous service, and no-one tries to hurry you along. But back to more important issues - those lobsters. From 12 noon until 5.00 pm every day, including weekends and holidays, you can feast on two boiled chicken lobsters for only $7.99. The price rises to $9.99 after 5.00 pm, but this is still a steal given the quality of the entire experience when dining here. Visit after visit demonstrates that at Joseph's they know how to cook lobsters to perfection. On average, they serve 20,000 pounds of lobsters a month, which indicates that the kitchen is doing something right. And the lobster bargains don't stop there; from time to time there are unadvertised specials featuring larger lobsters for under $10.00.

Now let's admit it, there are some among us who prefer red meat, and Joseph's has just the answer to carnivorous cravings. For the same price as the lobster, you can instead have prime rib, and what delicious prime rib it is - a generous thick cut, cooked exactly as requested, meltingly tender, and wonderfully flavorful.

Both entrees are accompanied by a token serving of potato and vegetable of the day; the vegetables on the last occasion were somewhat overdone, but the roast potatoes were excellent.

There are plenty of other dishes on the menu, including sandwiches costing between $5.99 and $6.99, a large choice of meat, fish and seafood dishes plus a fairly extensive selection of Italian specialties (both meat and seafood) with prices ranging from $8.99 to $19.99. Quite honestly, we do not think that the more expensive offerings are really worth the price; the twin lobsters and the prime rib offer truly the best value. Having said this, however, we must now reveal what could be the best bargain of all at Joseph's. For the night owls among you, there is a special "Late Nite Menu", served from 10.00 pm until 1.00 am (last orders being taken at 12.30 am), with everything for only $4.99. This menu is actually identical to the lunch menu, and includes a selection of Italian and fish dishes, such as broiled scrod, Nantucket pie, fish and chips, cutlet parmiagiana with pasta, sausage cacciatore with pasta and baked ziti with ricotta. Sandwiches, an 8oz hamburger and an omelet are also offered. Lobster, alas, does not appear, but the prime rib is available in the form of an open sandwich.

Desserts are sensibly priced at $1.95 for ice cream and sherbet, with everything else costing $2.95. We have sampled the better than average grapenut pudding and the apple crisp, which was also good, though they rather shortchanged us of the expected crispy topping; we also tried the Missippi mud pie, a mocha ice cream in an admittedly delicious chocolate case.

Joseph's Aquarium has a full bar and will accept reservations for parties of three or more. On weekends, parties of one or two can expect a wait of up to two hours. And after the meal is over, there is one more bargain in store for you. We find it hard to believe, but we saw it with our own eyes - the valet parking is only $4.00, and for cars left after 10.00 pm, the price drops to $2.00. Yes, just $2.00.

CHEF OF THE MONTH
Stan Frankenthaler of the Blue Room

by Marge Chryssostomidis & Peter McNamara

Stan Frankenthaler brings impressive credentials to the Blue Room, which opened on October 13. He was born in Germany, graduated from the Culinary Institute of America in New York, and on moving to Boston, worked at the Parker House and the Meridian Hotel before becoming sous chef at Jasper's Restaurant, where he stayed for four years. To broaden his experience, Stan then took time off to travel extensively through France and Italy where he studied wines. Returning to Boston, he cooked at Hamersley's Bistro, started a catering company (Choice Catering), which won a Best of Boston award, and while running it, helped out briefly in the kitchens at Olive's, Michela's, and finally the East Coast Grill. Stan has now given up his catering company in order to devote himself full time to the Blue Room.

One of the newest restaurants in town is the Blue Room, located at 1 Kendall Square in an old factory building (just off Hampshire Street) in Cambridge. Owned by Chris Schlesinger and Cary Wheaton, the co-owners of the legendary East Coast Grill, and with the kitchen under the control of the very talented Stan Frankenthaler, the Blue Room promises to produce some of the most interesting and avant garde food around. Where else, for example, can you find spit roasted rabbit with masa hearth cakes and dark mole sauce, served with pan roasted winter squash and greens? Or grilled swordfish with fig tapenade, or persian spice rubbed smokey duck leg with warm potato and chick pea stew and dried fruit chutney? And we just can't wait to try the roast baby Massachusetts leg of lamb for four people. The Blue Room is open daily for dinner, while continental breakfast and lunch are served on weekdays. For reservations, call 494-9034.

Welcome to The Elephant Walk, surely one of the dining scene's most closely guarded secrets. Open since mid August, this family run restaurant serves traditional French and Cambodian cuisine. The Cambodian dishes are particularly good, not to mention unusual. It is located at 70 Union Square in Somerville; lunch and dinner are served Mon- Sat. For reservations, call 623-9939.

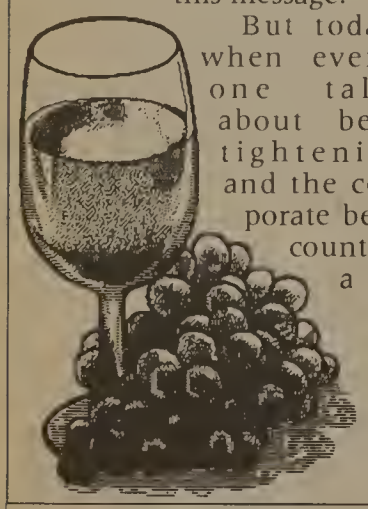
Welcome also to A Bar and Grill (yes, that really is its name). Located at 111 Dartmouth Street, Boston. Telephone 353-0160. This month-old restaurant serves a bistro style menu plus interesting daily specials in the $5.50-$15.95 range. As for the bar, well the Palm Beach crowd seem to have descended on it already, and local celebrities are flocking in. Keep an eye on this place.

Look out for Rayz, which is opening on November 4 at the Cambridgeside Galleria. The menu will feature salads, hamburgers, seafood and fajitas.

Sunday brunch lovers take note: now that fall is here, brunch is once again being served at Icarus. The menu combines a mix of traditional and innovative dishes, including some interesting reinterpretations (we've all had a BLT, but how many times have you had it made with lean twice-smoked bacon on grilled home made bread?). Icarus is at 3 Appleton Street, Boston, telephone 426-1790

Timmi Lee, known to may as "Cambridge's Best Bartender", has returned to Boston as a redhead this fall, and is now tending bar at Joe's Bar and Grill on Newbury Street.

The Cambridge School of Culinary Arts has announced the latest of their culinary excursions. Departing on November 22 and returning on December 1, the tour offers the chance to explore the sights and gastronomic specialties of Spain (Barcelona) and the Basque and Bordeaux regions of France. For more information call 354-3836.



The Celebrity Chef Series is under way at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts. Guest chefs and cookbook authors give lectures and demonstrations; there is still time to sign up for Gordon Hamersley of Hamersley's Bistro on November 4, George Germon and Johanne Killeen of Al Forno's and Lucky's in Providence, RI on November 18, and the inimitable Julia Child on December 9. For information call 354-3836.

Restaurant goers will be delighted to learn that the indispensable 1992 Zagat Boston Restaurant Survey is finally out, and is available at major bookstores, price $9.95

In the Realm of the Spirits

by Al Stankus

Life's Too Short To Drink Cheap Wine was one of the more popular bumper stickers born during those recently bygone days of conspicuous consumption. And when the money flowed as smoothly as '61 Chateau Margaux, it seems a lot more of us could toast to the snooty pretensions of this message.

But today, when everyone talks about belt-tightening and the corporate bean counters are putting a lid on expense accounts, if you're one who find popular, but cheap wines like Glen Ellen Chardonnay to be a cloying mess, how could something poured from a Paul Masson screw-top jug ever cut it? More and more of us are finding that our Haut-Brion tastes are being fed by a Bartles and Jaymes pocket-book.

Now go back to that yuppie-inspired bumper sticker. It says "cheap." If you've ever engaged in any of that sophomoric prattle that differentiates between "cheap" vs. "inexpensive" raise your glass and listen up. Just as the Yugo is a cheap car and the Hyundai is an inexpensive one, there's cheap wine and there's inexpensive wine.

But rather than blast the cheap swill that fills too many bottles, we'll save space and energy and only praise some of the many and inexpensive (under $9), yet interesting wines that can be found in and around Boston.

France, the home of Chassagne-Montrachets, Sauternes, Corton-Charlemagnes, and ruby red Pomerols, is also a country where practically every region produces wine. Once reserved for the local populace, in recent years, no doubt seeing a void that California has failed to fill, French shippers have begun to export these so-called "country wines."

From the Minervois, in the South, you'll find surprisingly full-bodied reds. Look for labels bearing Chateau Fabas ($6), Paraza ($6), and Chateau de Gourgazaud ($7), for rich, fruit-forward, softly-structured wines that are strong enough to stand up to a grilled sirloin while at the same time friendly enough for something as simple as macaroni and cheese or a takeout roast chicken.

Need a white wine for a broiled scrod or simply to sip while dinner cooks? From the Bordeaux, steely and whistle-clean with the taste of the Sauvignon Blanc grape are the wines bearing the shipper's name Sigoulet ($5). From the same Minervois that gives us rich, squarely-priced reds, we also get rich whites. Aged for a bit in oak, both the Chateau Gourgazoud Blanc ($7) and Chateau Ormieres ($6) are lusher and more opulent than their price tags suggest.

Outside of France, look for the following wines:

•Chile: Unduragga Cabernet Sauvignon Reserve ($7), 1990 Los Vascos Sauvignon Blanc ($6), and anything from Santa Rita.

•Australia: Jacob's Creek Chardonnay ($7.50), Penfold's Shiraz-Cabernet blend ($8). as well as the sparkling wine dubbed Yalumba Angus Brut ($9), one of the best champagne clones on the market today.

•Italy: The 1990 Ricasoli Chianti ($5), Masciarelli Montepulciano de Abruzzo ($6), and 1990 Antinori Orvieto ($8).

•Spain: 1986 Marques de Caceres ($7), Castillo Jumilla ($6), and Conde de Valdemar ($7).

•United States: Hacienda Dry Chenin Blanc ($5.50) and Heitz Grignolino ($7).

As you see, our own country comes up on the short side when price is measured against taste.. Maybe it has something to do with the regionalism that lies within Europe's big three - France, Italy and Spain - as well as wine being an "everyman's" beverage in those countries. But California, and to a lesser extent Oregon and Washington, seem to have a more difficult time coming up with a "house wine" that I'd be willing to serve in my house.

Addis Red Sea Ethiopian Restaurant
If you feel like broadening your dining experience venture to Addis' cozy basement quarters nestled in the South End. When eating Ethiopian, prepare to relax and revel as much in the prucess as in the cuisine itself. Sit on low seats around the mesob, an intricate straw table on which the meal is served. Drink a bottle of tej, Ethiopian honey wine, and eat with your hands,- using injera, a tasteless, white spongy bread, to scoop up "yummy" dishes of vegetables, and chicken or lamb seasoned with spices such as curry and turmeric. If you dine with a close friend, feed each other in Ethiopian custom. Open daily. Reservations accepted. Closed Tue.

Locke-Ober's 3 Winter Pl., Bos. 542-1340 A, MC,V $$$$
Opened in 1875, Locke-Ober's has been visited by such personalities as Marilyn Monroe and honey Joe DiMaggio, E.E. Cummings and the ever infamous Kennedys. The mahogany floors and chandeliers add to the "Turn of the Century" look at this Brahmin institution which serves up Continental and New England cuisine. Always a highlight is the Lobster Savannah (shelled, diced lobster prepared in a cream sauce with pimentos, bell peppers, mushrooms, sherry and Parmesan cheese). Lunch served Mon.-Fri. Dinner daily. Jacket and tie required.

Mary Chung Restaurant
447 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 864-1991
This inexpensive Chinese joint located in Central Sq. is always full. The menu offers good Szechuan in heaping portions. Be sure to try Mary's specialty, a spicy broth with pork dumplings, bean sprouts and veggies.

Ristorante Marino
2465 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 868-5454 A,MC,V $$
A visual treat! See food prepared right before your eyes from behind a big picture window. Dine in a large atrium under a glass roof on one of several organic and chemical-free dishes. Marino owns several farms from where all the produce and meats originate. His farm in Natick (87 Pleasant St.) is open to the public. Try their porchetti, daily pig specials. Lunch Mon-Sat. Open daily for dinner.

Rocco's
5 Charles St. South, Transportation Bldg., Bos. 723-6800 A,D,MC,V $$
Eclectic international cooking and a bit of whimsy! Dine on salmon fishcakes (a layer of potato pancake and salmon) under cathedral high ceilings and play with the folk art pieces on each table-they're for sale. Frescoes of putti and hanging sculptured suits add to Rocco's overall cheer. Desserts, including a chocolate chip cheesecake are the best part, so save room! If you come after the theater, sit at the long cherry wood bar that also functions as a gallery. Cognac and special beverage connoisseurs will never leave. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Shalimar of India
546 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 547-9280
A,MC,V $
This Indian dive/restaurant at Central Sq. specializes in Northern Indian cuisine. After some pakoras (spinach and cauliflower deep-fried in chickpea batter) and raita (yogurt and cucumber), choose from several chicken and shrimp tandoori (baked in a clay oven) and curry plates. Lunch Mon.-Sat. Dinner daily. Relax over chaiy (Indian tea) at the Sun. buffet-style brunch from 12:00-3pm.

Siam Cuisine
961 Commonwealth Ave., Bos. 254-4335
A,MC,V $$
The taste of Thailand can be yours at this little restaurant.
Start with some sar tay (tender chicken on bamboo skewers with spicy peanut sauce) and then have some pad Thai (Thailand's national dish concocted with rice noodles, peanuts, scallions and lime juice. Wine and beer available. Lunch Mon.-Sat. Dinner daily.

Skipjack's Seafood Emporium
2 Brookline Place, Brookline Village 232-8887 A.D.MC.V $$
A cornucopia of ocean delights! Fresh seafood will tantalize you at this light and airy, pastel coated restaurant. Try the tuna Skipjack style - prepared with a mild cajun flavor. Berber swordfish, a swordfish steak baked with Moroccan blend of 14 spices served with seasonal chutney, also pleases. Choose from a wide array of wines with your meal. Reservations are recommended on weekends.

St. Botolph Restaurant
99 St. Botolph St., Bos. 266-3030
A,D,MC,V $$$
Dine in a trendy polished red and black café or eat more formally upstairs. Either way, you'll love the Italian (café fare) and Continental cuisine (upstairs) offered at this charming brownstone establishment. One critics' pick is the noisettes of lamb with tarragon fettucini, goat cheese and spinach topped off with an ample slice of white chocolate cheesecake. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Sun. brunch 11:30am-3pm.

Union Oyster House
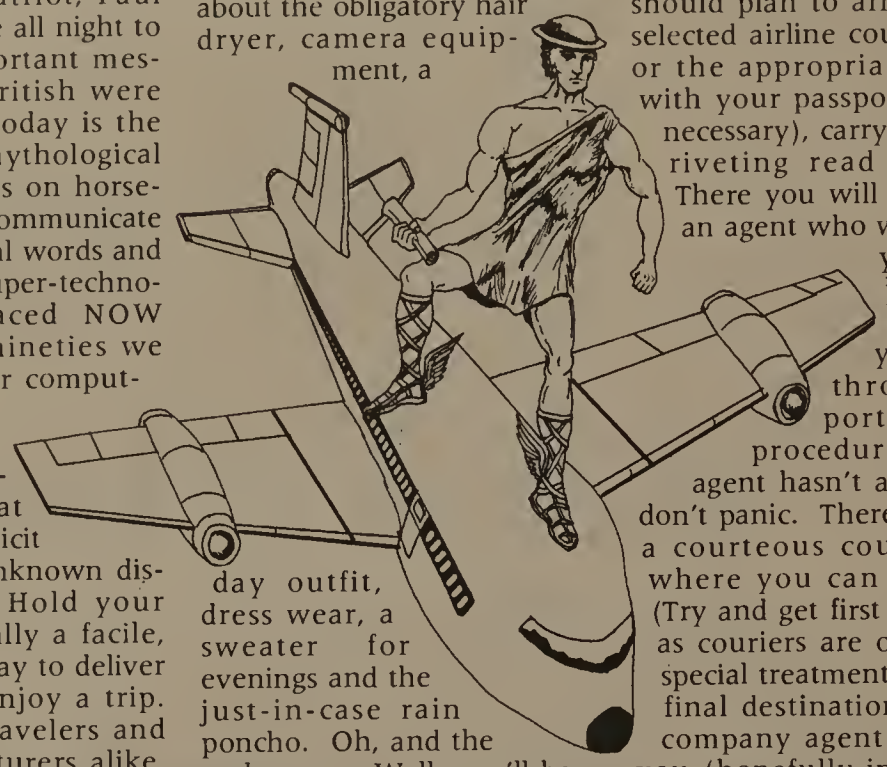
Experience a taste of history! Opened in 1826, this Boston landmark is the oldest restaurant in continuing business in the U.S. Their raw oyster bar, where you can still gobble down oysters, littlenecks and cherry stones, was often a hangout for Daniel Webster. If raw isn't your bag, you can order up the popular crab cakes in Newherg sauce or broiled scrod. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

TRAVEL

Mercury's Message
COURIER TRAVEL

by Shawn Goodwin



Mercury, the Roman messenger of the Gods, bore important dispatches to other deities and mortals alike flying by the wings on his heels. Perhaps more comprehensible to Bostonians is the famed story of American silversmith and patriot, Paul Revere, who rode all night to deliver the important message that the British were coming. Gone today is the reliance upon mythological figures and riders on horseback to quickly communicate and deliver crucial words and goods. In the super-technological, fast-paced NOW decade of the nineties we have faxes, super computers, AT&T and. . . airline couriers.

Fly as a courier? Doesn't that mean carrying illicit contraband to unknown distant borders? Hold your fears. It's actually a facile, fun and frugal way to deliver messages and enjoy a trip. For armchair travelers and practiced adventurers alike, this just might be your ticket!

Ever wanted to jet to Mexico City for a week of authentic margaritas and sol? How about a weeks sojourn to Madrid for only $150. That's round trip! Or maybe a taste of the Orient has always been on your someday dream-plan. (Now Voyager flies to Singapore throughout November for $399 RT for a two week stay.) Well, if you have a little time, even less money and are bitten by the not so innocuous "travel bug", read on.

How does a courier service work?

Courier services use the luggage space that you would have used for checked baggage to send their clients' goods. These services then sell seats to freelance couriers at a devilishly discounted rate and allow them to take only carry-on bags. I know, what about the obligatory hair dryer, camera equipment, a day outfit, dress wear, a sweater for evenings and the just-in-case rain poncho. Oh, and the scuba gear. Well, you'll be amazed just how much sheer mass of stuff you can cram into a couple of carry-ons.

Regarding rates, they vary and are based on current fares. So if regular airline rates are low, courier prices will be lower too. Often you can reserve up to a month or two in advance. Or if you want real bargain prices and don't mind choosing from a smaller selection of destinations, you can take advantage of 'last minute specials' that may reduce the discounted price up to another 50 percent. Most tickets vary from offering a week, nine day or two week stay. And sometimes, if you're lucky, you can even find thirty day and open-ended tickets.

What is the process?

Once you've picked a choice courier company, a dreamy destination and have booked your flight, you should plan to arrive at the selected airline courier office or the appropriate airport with your passport, visa (if necessary), carry-ons and a riveting read in hand. There you will be met by an agent who will finalize your paperwork and push you through airport check-in procedures. If the agent hasn't arrived yet, don't panic. There is usually a courteous courier desk where you can check in. (Try and get first class seats, as couriers are often given special treatment.) At your final destination, another company agent will greet you (hopefully in English), escort you through customs and pick up the delivered merchandise. Sometimes in addition to giving up your baggage space, you will hand deliver a package to the agent at the other end. It's always a good idea to know just what you're carrying; even though it won't be anything nearly as exciting as what your jealous friends are claiming.

Most courier companies use their full-time staff but some offer flights to casual free-lancers. Unfortunately, most companies operate out of New York City. But they will still save you $$$$$, especially if you can hitch a ride to the Big Apple.

So if you need that long-awaited voyage, a week's excursion to Europe, or a month long odyssey to the Far East, you don't have to count pennies, day dream and read Condé Nast Traveler. You don't have to quit your job and become a professional courier. Just take Mercury's message, and the skies are yours.

INTERROGATING IDENTITY

by Tamara Fort

Who am I? What am I? Eighteen minority artists from the U.S., Canada and Great Britain have collaborated to create , an exhibit, which focuses on the identity complex of minority cultures in predominantly white, English-speaking countries.

The diverse collection of talent explores the use of the term "Black" as a label for all minority groups. In the US, "Black" identifies African-Americans, but in Britain and Canada the term encompasses more groups, such as people of African, Caribbean, South Asian, and Middle Eastern descent. All ethnic and racial groups in Canada are categorized as Black-Canadians.

INTERROGATING IDENTITY
18 International Minority Artists investigate minority identities.
Through Nov. 3
Museum of Fine Arts
465 Huntington Ave.
Boston, MA.
267-9300Ext. 300

Interrogating Identity investigates minority identity through avant-garde works that are visually pleasing, as well as intricate in concept. Different genres of paintings, photography, figurative, and performance art are represented in the Foster Galleries.

The artists in Interrogating Identity are the first to come to the MFA with similar goals. In 1988, the MFA exhibited Massachusetts Masters: Afro-American Artists, an exhebition with no common themes. Their race was the only similarity.

Throne for the Justice, 1991, Albert Chong

Twenty-six year-old Gary Simmons uses everyday images to address issues of race in America. He parodies the traditional "his" and "hers" monogrammed towels by depicting a pair of black towels monogrammed "Us" and "Them".

"The towels represent the constant reminder of our differences," said Trevor Fairbrother, the Beal Curator of Contemporary Art at the MFA. In another piece, Simmons elevates Reeboks to a higher plane. The world-renowned "Pump It Up" sneakers, shelved high up on the wall, are bronzed like a pair of baby shoes, intimating the high price of the product. The expensive shoes target poor minority teens as its main consumer. "These shoes are fun, sexy and also deadly," comments Fairbrother. This symbolic piece is a social, political and economic commentary on the lives of inner-city youth and the injust practice of advertising to perpetuate perceived needs.

By using humor as a tool for political expression, Canadian artist Rebecca Belmore enlightens audiences to the cultural diversity in Canada. Belmore, a native Objiwe Indian created the piece "Rising to the Occasion" in honor of the Royal Family's visit to Canada.

A Victorian ball gown, made of beige satin, maroon velvet, chicken wire, twigs, Charles and Di teacups and ashtrays, may not be the usual garb that Princess Di wears, but for Belmore, the costume expresses two different perspectives unique to Canada. The front of the gown depicts the stolid presence of Britain in Canada. The costume's suede fringe, colored beads and twigs represent Canada's numerous native peoples..

Some of the works in Interrogating Identity are representative of other universal themes such as family and human strife. Jamaican born artist, Albert Chong, honors his father, a former justice of the peace, with "Throne of Justice". The installation includes a shell-covered throne, set in a bed of feathers, surrounded by coconuts and two photo variations on the throne. Images representative of the Chong's father include a cigar box holding a picture of Chong's father and the artist's severed dreadlocks, which sit on the throne. The coconuts, however, poke fun at the stereotype of Jamaica being the land of coconuts.

"All the news that's fit to print," becomes the subject of Glen Ligon's Profiles Series. Utilizing excerpts from the New York Times series on the Central Park Jogger Rape, Ligon presents his view of the truth behind the printed word. The Profile Series, composed of nine billboards with stenciled newspaper print, features the teens convicted of raping the Jogger. The texts resemble old smudged newsprint. Only one Ligon print is completely legible. The blurred billboards challenge the audience to question not only the quality of the print, but more importantly the quality of the words and the portrayal of the convicted teens.

Interrogating Identity compels audiences to explore and examine the truth in issues of race and identity The exhibit is an eclectic source of insight. This group of innovative artists has created a great forum for issues that have been long ignored.

The MFA redeems itself for its avoidance of the black artist and the issue of developing identity in a culture that often surpresses it. This exhibition organized by the Grey Art Gallery and Study Center at New York University was brought to Boston by the Ruth Abrams Exhibition Endowment, the Abby Weed Grey Trust and the Friends of the Grey Art Gallery.

FOREVER PLAID

by Nancy Leonard

Forever Plaid, in for an open-ended run at the Terrace Room in Boston Park Plaza Hotel, has some amiable charm. But it comes after such a long while, and in so many fits and starts, that it's just not enough for a satisfying evening.

That's surprising because writer/director/choreographer Stuart Ross's tribute to harmonizing "guy groups" of the 1950's has been playing for over a year off Broadway, and has spawned a number of imitators across the country. Here in Boston one can only wonder about such popular appeal.

Ross has imagined a dead semi-professional harmony group coming back to life after 27 years for a chance to play a concert of their dreams. The four guys- Smudge, Sparky, Jinx and Frankie- met in the high school audiovisual club and became The Plaids at nights and on weekends. Their idols were such groups as the Four Lads, The Four Freshman and the Four Aces. After graduation, they continued to develop their sound while supporting themselves with mundane day jobs.

Then in February, 1964, on their way to pick up their plaid tuxedos for their first big gig at the Airport Hilton cocktail bar, the Fusel Lounge, their Mercury Monterey convertible was slammed broadside by a schoolbus from Our Lady of Harrisburg filled with teens en route to the U.S. television debut of the Beatles. The Plaids were killed instantly. Now, we have the four guys solemnly proceeding to four shrouded microphones, playing for more people than they ever did in life, "making the biggest comeback since Lazarus."

This odd premise produces some intentionally awkward opening numbers, filled with nervous panic, blank stares, misplaced lyrics, and overly synchronized dips and gestures. There's supposed to be humor and appeal in all the initial uncertainty—covering such standards as "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Moments to Remember," and "No, Not Much"—but it's basically ordinary and tedious.

Things pick up about a third of the way through. The up-beat "Perfidia," followed by the dramatics of "Cry" (Johnny Ray's signature song), warm the proceedings. The Plaids' singing resume is a cute segment. The straw-hatted Calypso hijinks, from Harry Belafonte's songbook, are good fun. The. "Sixteen Tons"/"Chain Gang." medley is quite effective.

There's a predictable audience participation piece ("Heart and Soul") and a warm-hearted tribute to Perry Como ("Papa Loves Mambo," "Catch a Falling Star"). Some will consider the raucous commotion evoking The Ed Sullivan Show as a high point; others will find it fairly pointless. Although the Plaids eventually encounter a glittery world of solid-gold albums and plaid tuxedos ("Shangri-La," "Rags to Riches"), the evening ends rather inconclusively, after some vague chatter about musical metaphysics, with an anticlimactic "Love is a Many Splendored Thing."

It's hard to get excited about the "easy-listening" music of the 50's, before rock n' roll and crossover sounds came into ascendancy, so Ross wraps this music in a comic-book story of virtue and striving. He means to evoke an era of inoffensive harmony—in both social and musical terms. His performers—Jeff Bannon, David Benoit, Leo Daignault and Dale Standish— are truly talented, and sing with style. They even develop a modicum of personality (the nervous nose-bleeder, the pudgy boy, the nerd, etc.) But despite the efforts, there's not enough punch in the book or the music or the characterization to make this captivating entertainment. The jokes are not very funny, and we're never convinced that The Plaids deserve their belated reward.

Pianist Ron Roy and string-bassist Ed Wells ably back the singers. Jane Reisman's plaid tuxedos are witty, but less attractive than the Scottish tartans which precede them.

Evoking the innocent harmonies of the 50's, "Forever Plaid" is a tepid tribute of modest appeal. However, if you still want to go, you can call The Boston Park Plaza Hotel, at 426-2000 for tickets and performance times.

Play It by Ear

Remember when board games were played on a board and players read the questions, mispronouncing words like diphyltetra? Remember when the only thing you needed to play the game was two or more players and the game itself? Well, a revolution has taken place, freeing the gaming public of mispronunciations, false questions, and typical game requirements. Rykodisc, pioneers of the 3" CD single and creators of the longest CD ever, has introduced Play It By Ear, the first board game ever to utilize CD technology.

Played much in the same way as Trivial Pursuit with the added dimension of sound, PIBE requires just one more piece of hardware - a disc player. The chances of playing an identical game are very slim since it contains over 1800 questions and 350 sound bites. Also, with twelve different categories such as "Sports" (with sounds and voices from memorable games and people), "Animals" (animal grunts and whinnies) and "Tongue Twisters" (repeat "The big black bug bleeds black blood" three times), the boredom factor, once a problem with Trivial Pursuit and other trivia games, is kept to a minimum. ROBERTA FLACK
IN CONCERT

Grammy-award winning recording artist Roberta Flack will be appearing at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening November 10 at 8:00 P.M. Since the late 1960's Flack's distinctive soft-soul ballads have soared to the top of both the pop and R&B charts. She began her carer as a trained classical pianist. A winner of numerous Grammys over the past twenty years, Flack has delivered such mega hits as "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face", "Where Is The Love", "The Closer I Get To You", "Killing You Softly", and "Feel Like Making Love". She has colaborated with such greats as Donny Hathaway, Peabo Bryson, Quincy Jones and Luther Vandross.

Her More recent successes have included several albums ("Roberta Flack Featuring Donny Hathaway", "Live and More", "The Best of Roberta Flack", "Born to Love", "Oasis") as well as contributions to such great artists as John Lennon and Sarah Vaughn. In "Set the Night to Music", (Atlantic Records), Flack sings everything from up tempo songs to ballads, from the contemporary title song to the fifties standard, "My Foolish Heart"

Her Symphony Hall appearance , which is open to the public will benefit the Cohen Hillel Accademy.

Looks Can Be Deceiving
An Interview with Andrew Strong of "The Commitments"

by Tobin Streett

When I was told that Andrew Strong, lead singer of The Commitments, was seventeen years old, I didn't believe it. I'd seen The Commitments and there wasn't any way this guy was less than twenty-eight. But here I was, face to face with the most mature seventeen year old I'd ever met.

He was admittedly taken aback by the media fascination and public response. "I don't think anyone in L.A. was expecting ten kids from Ireland to have a blockbuster movie and an album do so well. It feels really good."

Strong recently signed his first solo record deal with MCA Records and is currently riding the crest of the success of the "blue-eyed soul" soundtrack that's selling 100,000 copies a week. In the movie, he plays Deco Cuffe, the obnoxious lead singer of the Commitments, but in person Andrew Strong was nothing less than polite . . . and a little tired. But even with his current publicity tour, record deal and hit movie, he doesn't find stardom to be overwhelming. As a matter of fact, he doesn't even consider himself a star.

"I'm not a star. People ask me, 'What's it like to be a star?' I say, 'Have a house with ten million [dollars] on the canyon in Bel Air in Los Angeles. That's what it's like.'"

His record deal is itself also something that Andrew Strong feels, well . . . strong about. "I never thought I was going to get a big record deal. Everybody's going around saying that I've got this big new mega, six album, million dollar deal. That's all a load of bullshit. I've got a normal deal, a standard deal for my album and that's it. It doesn't make me any different than anyone else just because I'm in the film."

And with so many people seeing the film and buying the soundtrack, there've been rumours of a Commitments tour. Seeming genuinely torn between the band and his new solo career, Strong says, "No, I'm not touring with them. They're actually doing something at the moment in Ireland. They just rang me up today with some cancer gig with Hothouse Flowers and they wanted to do it and I can't because I'm writing my album and it's very important to me.

> "The Commitments are only a part of me. It's like taking off my finger and saying 'there it is man, look, that's the star there. My finger. It's not really me, you know. That person on the screen is not me'"

"The Commitments are only a part of me. It's like taking off my finger and saying 'there it is man, look, that's the star there. My finger. It's not really me, you know. That person on the screen is not me.' It's portraying another character. Another human being. It is me in reality, but when I sell 800,000 copies of my own albums and they're all in the chart position, when it says Andrew Strong, you know, that's when I'll feel really, really happy. But I feel great and it's given me a wonderful opportunity and its been a wonderful vehicle for me to achieve all of those goals."

Do these sound like the words of someone with the number one record and movie in Europe, Ireland and England? Coming from a guy who got the part meant for someone with the looks of a pretty boy, Andrew Strong has come a long way. He was given the part after Alan Parker, director of The Commitments, heard him singing background vocals with his father during the lead singer auditions - a part that needed looks and a knock-em-dead voice. Instead, they got Strong. And with him, a rare vocal ability. In its rawest state, his voice challenges John Lennon's "Twist and Shout", and in its most melodic state can soothe an audience's soul with "Try A Little Tenderness".

Andrew Strong has enjoyed the success of the movie but he didn't expect the media to react to him as they have so far. It seems that some reporters who have talked with him have been hesitant and cautious, expecting Andrew to be more like his character, Deco Cuff. "A lot of journalists feel a bit apprehensive about interviewing me because of the character I portray. They're probably expecting me to say, Did you ask me that fucking question?"

"It's like you've got Deco Cuffe in the left palm of your hand and Andrew Strong in the right palm and you put both of your arms out like that, into that direction [hands outstretched] and let your hands go. That's how the similarities go. In this film, there're ten kids from the lower class and I come from a middle class. My folks sent me to boarding school. We have a nice house. We don't drive a Mercedes but we live a normal life."

"Deco Cuffe-he's got an attitude problem. He's an asshole. Nobody likes him and he thinks he knows everything, which he doesn't, and in this music game, you have to sit there. You have to listen to people. You have to listen to what they have to say. You have to get experience and you don't want to go around acting like an asshole. You know, everybody's an asshole sometime in their life but not all the time... Far from Deco's upbringing."

But despite Deco's vulgar personality, Strong acknowledges that it was fun to play him. "It's kind of like, 'Hey, I'm going to be an asshole today.' It was cool. To me, it was just fun. I never realized how much fun it would be because [making a film] is serious."

It's apparent that Strong takes The Commitments seriously by how he ranks it with the all-time best. "The three best rock and roll films I've ever seen in my entire life: Spinal Tap, Blues Brothers and The Commitments."

But with all of the success its brought to him, Andrew says that the filming was difficult. It wasn't always easy for him to perform in front of the cameras. In fact, he sometimes had to be urged during the filming. "If anybody influenced me and kicked my ass to get up on stage, it was my father. He's a singer as well. A soul singer. Great, great voice."

His father wasn't the only motivating force in his music or acting career. "An awful lot of people say to me, 'you're influenced by John Cochraine a lot', but if I said I didn't listen to John Cochrane, I'd tell a lie. I own every soul album since 1949 and I listen to Ray Charles, Bad Company, Bob Seger, The Doors, Janis Joplin and I could go on.

But this opportunity also means that he'll be in Los Angeles and away from Ireland, his family and his girlfriend for a while. Especially his girlfriend. "I have lots of girlfriends as friends but I've got a girlfriend now. Going steady a couple of months."

This sudden attention hasn't been all fun and games. Strong said that the three months of filming were, at times, grueling but he understands that his hard work also was balanced by a good cast of fellow actors and musicians. He even has a movie offer for Tom Clancy's Patriot Games and a new Tom Cruise movie being shot in Ireland. But Strong says that he won't decide on the movies until his album is completed. It kind of makes you wonder what kind of decisions Andrew Strong will be making when he's eighteen.

Other People's Money

NOT WORTH YOUR MONEY

by Ed Reynolds

In Other People's Money, Danny DeVito plays Larry 'the Liquidator' Garfield, a ruthless, money tyrant intent on destroying American companies in order to boost his own wealth. His Gordon Gekko meets Louis DePalma character is at war with Andrew "Jorgy" Jorgensen, played by Gregory Peck, over the future of New England Wire and Cable, a small, family run company in Rhode Island.

OTHER PEOPLE'S MONEY
Directed by:
Norman Jewison
Starring
Danny DeVito
Gregory Peck
Penelope Ann Miller
Piper Laurie

Complicating matters is Kate Sullivan, a Wall Street lawyer played by a smoking Penelope Ann Miller. She is caught in the middle of this struggle; torn between her ideals of family and community and her own greed and demand for power. Because her mother is involved with Jorgensen, Penelope defends New England Wire and Cable. But there's a part of her that is attracted to Garfield and his inane ability to play the money game. She decides to fight the battle on his terms; using underhanded and illegal tactics to win the war for truth and justice.

Although this film tackles such grand themes as Wall Street greed versus New England puritanism, the shallow portrayals of the characters involved render the preformance uneffective. Peck plays the only believable role in the film. Jorgensen is noble and caring without coming across as an unworldly saint. As a champion of old-fashioned American concepts such as hard work and company brotherhood, Jorgensen is the perfect foil for DeVito's cold and ruthless money-lusting character.

DeVito and Miller, however, with weak script and weaker acting, don't convince. DeVito plays Garfield as devoid of personality; choosing to cast him merely as a doughnut lover fixated on his computer rather than exploring what makes him tick. Miller seems unsure whether to portray her charachter as a finance shark on the same level as Garfield or as a sympathetic do-gooder in touch with Jorgensen's cause. Adding further disbelief is their throwaway love connection. Physical disparity aside, one can only wonder at the wellspring of Kate's borderline attraction towards Garfield.

The film's only redeeming moment comes when Garfield and Jorgensen address the shareholders concerning the future of New England Wire and Cable. Jorgy preaches the idea of riding out the storm of hard times. He believes that what made America great once will make America great again and companies that have survived World Wars, recessions and a depression will rise once more as long as they are nursed through these tough times.

Garfield, in reaction, argues that everyone should look out for themselves. Companies that show meager profits are obsolete, and if someone can make a buck off the destruction of industrial America - more power to them. He believes that capitalism thrives on propelling the self forward and ideals such as community and family are better off left behind.

Pretty heady stuff for a lame movie.

WHAT'S SHOWING

Fisher King
In a Terry Gilliam masterpiece, Robin Williams plays a homeless "fool" who's befriended by unemployed DJ, Jeff Bridges. Together, in their quest for the Holy Grail, they discover that life has some splendors after all.

Freddy's Dead
Finally, the end to our Nightmares!. Freddy undergoes a number of changes in this 3-D attempt to kill America's favorite dream-slayer.

Paradise
Don Johnson and Melanie Griffith's off-screen romance lends a hand to their on-screen relationship. Chilled by the loss of their child, they're love is rekindled with the help of a young boy charmingly played by Elijah Wood.

Ricochet
The "convict seeks revenge on the cop who did him in" theme is still alive as John Lithgow and Denzel Washington find a way to make an old theme thought provoking.

Frankie & Johnny
Michelle Pfeiffer is a frumpy waitress and Al Pacino plays her short-order cook as they serve up some love in this heartfelt romance.

Ernest Scared Stupid
Ernest strikes again. This time, he teams up with his friends to battle an army and an evil troll.

Deceived
Goldie Hawn discovers that her marriage has more to it than meets the eye and uses her intuition to find out why and by whom she is being deceived.

Shattered
Tom Berenger stars in this movie about an amnesia victim who doesn't know who's after him or anything else.

The Super
Joe Pesci plays a nefarious slumlord who is sentenced to live in one of his own apartment buildings in this attempt at comedy. It should have been left on the cutting board.

The Butcher's Wife

A Magical Romantic Farce

by Raoul Newman

A rustle of wind. A two tailed comet. A dream of a smile. A golden band. These are sure signs that you will soon find your long-awaited "split-apart". Split-apart? Yes, your soul mate, forever lover, or more conventionally labeled, spouse 'til-death-do-you-part. Or so says Marina (Demi Moore), a clairvoyant from Cape Verde, North Carolina, whose impulsive marriage brings her to New York City.

Demi Moore and Jeff Daniels star in this magical romantic farce, The Butcher's Wife, directed by Terry Hughes. When Marina arrives in Greenwich Village as Leo Lemke's (the butcher) new bride, the locals are quickly drawn to her mystical charm. Soon, she turns everyone's life topsy-turvy with her predictions and heartfelt words of wisdom.

Jeff Daniels superbly plays the role of Dr. Alex Tremor, an uptight and self righteous psychiatrist who treats everyone in town. Alex who sports a T-shirt that reads, "Unexplained life is not worth living," tries desperately to use reason and logic to explain the uncanny happenings that all are connected to Marina.

Robyn, Alex's girlfriend becomes convinced that Alex will be "the one" after hearing what she chooses to hear from Marina's divinations. Stella, a mousy choir teacher of "pimply-faced students" is persuaded to buy a racy blue sequined dress and sing the Blues after meeting Marina in a clothing boutique. At the boutique, Marina purchases a pair of white princess slippers and underpays the shop keeper, Grace. Grace comes to the butcher's shop to collect the owed money and changes her mind after Marina gives her a present of fresh meat and tells her that she will soon be "cooking for two".

Marina's predictions do in fact come true, much to everyone's delight but the Doctor's. Alex feels quite comfortable with his finger on the pulse of the town. After his patients' encounters with Marina, they don't think they need therapy anymore. They talk of love and crazy things. Alex is at first perplexed and then is threatened by this odd change. His own career and heart in jeopardy, he seeks to get to the bottom of things by plotting to treat this "touched" and strikingly beautiful butcher's wife.

Psychiatrist Dr. Tremor (Jeff Daniels) notices Marina's(Demi Moore)uncanny influence on the neighbor hood.

Alex's quest to treat Marina only lands everyone in more trouble, as ill matched lovers find their true mates. Throughout, Marina is pure of heart and straight of tongue. Her wisdom quickly penetrates Dr. Tremor's psychoanalytical jargon which can't explain such a mysterious and omnipotent force as love.

There are a few good twists and turns and plenty of laughs in this heart warming movie. Marina is portrayed throughout the film as ethereal, shot in subdued blue light, with the wind blowing her long angel-like golden locks. She just wants to be in love and make others happy; a pretty noble thought in this day and age.

So, dispel your disbelief, forgive the somewhat corny ending, and take a leap of faith. There's really no need to fret and worry so much over our relationships. Destiny will bring us all true love.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

THE COMMITMENTS
"A Slice of Urban Irish Life"
The Commitments has it all. Laughter, joy, pain, dreams and some of the best music that's come out in awhile. Director Alan Parker has band manager Jimmy Rabbitte tell us how he assembled a band that learned to play "white soul" music in Dublin. Once together, we see a group of Insh kids mold into a tight soul band that, as hard as it tries, can't quite dismiss individual differences for a greater good. But this movie's dialogue will make you laugh at life's subtleties, enjoy some new variations on old music and maybe "raise your expectations of life and lift your honzons.

EUROPA EUROPA
"Stranger Than Fiction"
A MUST SEE! This Agnieszka Holland treasure is a remarkably poignant and provocative film about a Jewish boy coming of age in Nazi Germany. Born ironically on Hitler's birthday, Solek (Marco Hofschneider) is seperated from his family and chooses to disavow his Jewish identity in order to survive as a solitary Jew in a world where Aryan-supremecy dogma rules.Surrounded by those who would like to "cut his flesh", Solek constantly wonders at the inexplicable revulsion his companions feel towards his race. After all, what seperates him but a foreskin? He struggles with his new identity, trying to fit in as he moves from a Russian orphanage to a German army camp and then to the top Hitler Youth school in the Fatherland. With no one to turn to, Solek fears anything could give him away: from the girlfriend who wants to bear the Fueher's child to a classroom lecture on "how to physically identify a Jew". This humorous and strikingly real, little-known film is in fact a true story.

THE FISHER KING
"A Slice of Magic"

My own Private Idaho
"Idaho- a private world "
This daring and humorous post contemporary Gus Van Sant film probes deeply into the issues of self identity. River Pheonix stars as a male prostitute who suffers from narcolepsy, a disorder that causes him to fall dead asleep when stressed. Keanu Reeves plays his street buddy. Both look for private selves; River searches for his lost mother (even in Rome, Italy) who we see in his bizarre dream sequences. Keanu, a corrupt mayor's son explores the seedy realm of life with the other "Joyboys" before he conforms in order to inherit his fortune

Slacker
"A Pointless and Isolated Vision"
It's hard to imagine that Richard Linklater is a director and not the subject of a psychiatric research study. Slacker is one man's perception of his generation, - one that lingers on street corners, complaining, wandering, theorizing and barely breathing. Linklater, who is himself in his twenties, presents apathy as an acceptable way to cope. Filmed around the University of Texas in Austin, Slacker captures a spintual void. We follow undeveloped scenarios into more undeveloped scenarios until the credits roll and you leave, wondenng where Linklater got the energy to make a movie.

The Allure of Wendy James

by Rey Roldan

She's blonde. She's hot. And she's got an attitude that can kill a water buffalo. Existentially perfect but verbally abusive, the dangerously sultry Wendy James has the body of Judy Jetson and the temper of Morton Downey, Jr. Fronting the British Sixties-wannabee alternative rock band Transvision Vamp, James comes from the Madonna School of Feminism where one learns to be always in control but at the same time sexually alluring. As record sales have indicated, a large majority of Europe finds her irresistible. Now, with the release of their third MCA album, Little Magnets Vs. The Bubble of Babble, James and her Vamp camp hope to conquer yet another market, the U.S.

"What we're all about is world-wide excitement," said James from New York via telephone. "We want to attract as many people as possible." If worldwide attraction is her game, displaying a lot of bare flesh is a pretty good strategy. One cannot help but make comparisons to American tramp vamp Madonna. This is one of the many comparisons that irks the cantankerous James. "We're not really that similar," she snaps. "I formed a Sixties Rock and Roll band and she's a solo singer. So musically there's a lot of difference. Mentally, I think we have a few things in common, as I do with many strong women."

Aside from her present feminist influences, James finds history, especially the Sixties, Seventies and the whole Warhol pop culture very appealing. "I can definitely say I was influenced by Andy Warhol," she explains. "I think that the whole period at the Factory [Warhol's camp of elite artistes] was very glamorous and fascinating. [That whole atmosphere] was probably the punk rock of New York in the Sixties with Edie Sedgewick and Warhol and obviously the Velvet Underground. I'm attracted to any kind of movement which puts a spoke in the works."

So does that make Wendy James a child of the Nineties with Sixties influences or vice versa? "I think we're as contemporary as anyone else as far as the Nineties are concerned," she explains. "It all really depends on how creative we are in the years to come. Whether or not we stay contemporary remains to be seen." Does she think they'll remain contemporary, changing with the times and styles that dictate our pop culture? "I think that we would because we're pretty much aware of what goes on around us and we're always eager to make progress," she says. In other words, anything that'll make them contemporary and controversial (which in today's music world translates into massive record sales) like sampling quotes from John Hinckley Jr. or adding Gregorian chants to the background of future Vamp releases. "No, not at all," she says with anger brewing. "We are a Sixties band and that is our story."

So what exactly is the story of this band called Transvision Vamp? "When I was seventeen, I was in a club in Britain trying to make some money to put myself through college," she reminisces. "Nick [Christian Sayer], my guitarist, was in the audience one night and he approached me and said 'Do you fancy starting a rock and roll band?' and I said, 'Yeah, why not.' And that started Transvision Vamp. So this is my first and only band." Together for over eight years, James and Sayer spent the bulk of it "putting out demos and getting the rest of the band together, trying to define our sound."

The advent of the band's career began in 1988 with their debut album Pop Art on MCA, a fine collection of post-modern, late "Eighties"-style rock. This critically acclaimed release broke them into the U.S. alternative scene with the cover of Holly Vincent's "Tell that Girl to Shut Up." This was followed by 1989's Velveteen which did not land them any monumental US singles, but further drove them into experimentation. "Baby I Don't Care" has the uncanny guitar hook that made the Troggs' "Wild Thing" such a huge hit three decades in a row. The new album Little Magnets Vs. The Bubble of Babble, while not as electrifying as their previous releases, shows a mature departure from their post-punk past and displays their new outlook on older musical styles. "We experimented a lot on this album. And I like the results," she replies. Sometimes bluesy and mellow but always playful, coy and edgy, the new release is much more eclectic and musically expansive. Some may find it surprising and exciting because of the diversity of the songs. While others may find it rather unsatisfying and unconnected because of the variety of musical styles and approaches. But, James remains optimistic. "I think we'll break through this time. I have a good feeling about this."

Well, what comes around goes around. The new trend in music and fashion is the retread of Sixties and Seventies styles. While bands like the Happy Mondays and Primal Scream abandon their late Eighties niche of thrashy, post modern excellence to follow the Psychedelia rebirth combined with funky, danceable beats, other bands stick true with their roots. Where does Transvision Vamp stand amongst all this retro-delic riffraff? Well, since they began as a Sixties band and still are a Sixties band, that must mean they were a bit ahead of their time but also born a bit late. Still, that doesn't worry the defensive and optimistic James about attracting contemporary audiences. With the new release Little Magnet Vs. The Bubble of Babble, let's hope they have the power to attract not just bubble-brains but also logical, music-minded listeners. Wendy James hopes so. "If you picture little magnets and the way they attract one another you realize it's a very natural thing. And there are certain people who are drawn to each other in life as there are certain things that are meant to happen. And I think we're meant to happen very soon."

Loud Sugar
LOUD SUGAR
(SBK Records)

So hook-driven, it hurts. Yet so incredible, it's almost unbearable. The debut by this psychedelic Squeeze/Crowded House outfit is the epitome of the feel-good album that's so soothing it could be the soundtrack for a Wonder Years episode. Devoid of hiphop beats, shimmery guitars, and anything trendy except maybe Beatle-esque harmonies, this band plays real infectious pop music, much like the Jackson 5 and the Monkees. They don't feign pseudo-intellectualism. They just sing pleasant, catchy pop songs that rival Difford and Tillbrook. "Change the Weather," one of their two environmentally conscious songs, speaks about the power of music for the world. David Grover sings, "M.C., now Preacher/ Bustin' through my stereo speaker/ So if I could add my humble harmony, I'd say/ Change the weather/ Get it together." Singing about global harmony, love, and the power of happiness, Loud Sugar puts a much needed smile in this world of pain, anger, and violence. Unfortunately overlooked by rock stations and only hinted at by alternative radio, Loud Sugar is definitely one of the best albums of this year. While Grover may have been "looking for an answer to my prayers/I have overlooked someone who cares," (from "Never Looked So Good," one of the most powerful ballads written in this decade so far), it seems to me like the people doing the overlooking are the media. -R.R.

Bullet LaVolta
(RCA)

Combining the breakneck guitar licks of metal, the ferociousness of hardcore, and the crunch of power punk, local favorites Bullet LaVolta are in rare form on their second full length release Swan Dive. Unlike many bands who have made the jump to major labels and subsequently delivered slickly produced mush, Bullet LaVolta stick to their guns. Producer Dave Jerden (Social Distortion, Jane's Addiction) clearly recognizes the beauty of keeping the guitars loud and up front, the snare crisp and the vocals raw. The results are a fitting representation of Bullet LaVolta as a band: Loud, Hard and Damn Good.

Remarkably, on Swan Dive they've managed to combine the raw energy of Nirvana with the spirit of Crazy Horse. The opening song "Rails" is a scorching blend of grit and distortion that would be right at home on the band's self-titled debut EP. Swan Dive not only brings Bullet LaVolta to their musical best but also to their most melodic. Lead singer Yukki Gipe confesses it's "been a long time since I kissed the floor with my face" on "Sunshine" which features some of the best rock and roll panting since the first Pretenders album. Surprisingly, the high point of the album comes when he gives his throat a rest providing White Album minimalism on the beautiful "What's in a Name."

Swan Dive closes with "Ceiling Life," a seven minute epic that shows off Duke Roth and Clay Tarver's impressive twin guitar work. This release will leave listeners hungry for a live show and bands like The Cult wishing they could play this hard. In the end, however, Bullet LaVolta's greatest adversary is not their aggressiveness but their diversity. -J.M.P.

MC FREE

by Rey Roldan

Aside from dropping the "M.C." in his name, Hammer has made a very important career move. Too Legit To Quit (Capitol) is his first album that doesn't rely on other people's creativity; in other words, no samples! With 1990's "U Can't Touch This," Hammer changed the entire meaning of the phrase "borrow a tune." Stealing the whole riff from Rick James' "Super Freak," he opened the door for numerous copycats, such as Soho ("Hippychick") and Vanilla Ice (need I mention?). It was also this revolutionary single that some believed ruined rap for the rest of time.

The follow-up to his multi-platinum Please Hammer Don't Hurt 'Em has been released to an over-Hammered public. Last year's heavy saturation on MTV and more recently, the Saturday morning cartoon Hammerman and Mattel's Hammer Doll (he's part of the Barbie line) attacking our nation's children, it seems that all we need now is a new album. As Vanilla Cheeseball's stardom fades as quickly as it appeared, Hammer's is beaming even brighter. The new album is not as unwelcomed as many people may have believed. While not as coolly calculated as Please... nor as fresh and innovative as 1988's Let's Get It Started, Too Legit... is a new chapter in Hammer history. Abandoning the samples that made him popular, Hammer has decided to play "real" music and go legit. With a horn section in tow (a revolutionary step for rap music) and live musicians instead of pre-recorded tracks, Too Legit... may be the right move to unsaturate the Hammer's effect on the music world.

With a total of 16 tracks, Too Legit... has enough singles to last Hammer at least two years until he has to record again. The opening cut "This Is the Way We Roll" proves right off the bat that he doesn't need samples to write a great pop song. Vaguely reminiscent of the Time's "Jungle Love," this song is the perfect Hammer single - a great dance beat and singable lyrics that Top 40 radio will undoubtedly snatch up. While not an entirely interesting album to listen to straight through, there are a enough good songs to fuel a party. "Releasing Some Pressure," probably the best written and strongest track, has the potential to soar to number one if released as a single. "Good To Go," a slow tempo rap (which usually doesn't work, i.e. 1990's "Have You Seen Her"), really succeeds in slowing down from the fast and furious rattle of rhymes to mellow, soft pop with an urban bend. However, he does fail on "Lovehold," where slow rap is mixed with soulful, melodic vocals. Hammer tries too hard to be romantic and his love rap just doesn't cut it. But when he succeeds, he really pulls the punches. The gospel flavor of "Don't Pass Me By" works well with his hiphop rapping style without seeming like a mismatch. The combination of the two very different music forms mesh powerfully, making it an intense, religious experience.

Whether Too Legit To Quit becomes the third platinum album for Stanley Kirk Burrell (no wonder he changed his name) depends whether he has the same massive exposure that he did last year. The road looks bumpy with obstacles such as the action figure, the cartoon and media's undivided attention (he's on The Addams Family soundtrack, a new Pepsi commercial and a Saturday Night Live episode in mid-December). Hammer has the potential for another blow-out with this new album and he's determined to do it. If he doesn't, we could always turn to Vanilla... Yeah right.

IMPROV BOSTON

by Tobin Streett

How long would it take you to write a joke? A couple of hours? Or maybe even a couple of days? No matter what you say, you most likely can't beat the speed at which ImprovBoston delivers their brand of humor which leaves few stones unturned but many achin' jaws and sore stomachs.

ImprovBoston is a fast-moving show of skits and situational improv that, unlike stand-up comedy, depends on audience participation. Without it, the improv troupe can do nothing but wait for the audience to wake up. A dull audience can make for a long show and a difficult time for the performers.

"It's a medium that demands maximum creativity" says Jim Lee, the manager of ImprovBoston. Improv is so fresh that it risks failure more than stand-up comedy, which typically is rehearsed. A stand-up comic has the luxury of rehearsing not only material but also delivery. But on stage, the improv comic must rely on intuition and respond to new situations spontaneously.

One member of ImprovBoston is Adam Felber who's been with them for over two years and has been practicing improv since his college days at Tufts. He says they rehearse "just like anyone else would rehearse for something." But they rehearse general material and can only prepare to an extent. Further elaborating, he describes the times when an audience throws ImprovBoston unfamiliar material as "the best moments. We want stuff that keeps us off-balance - we look for those moments." One of those "moments" might be when someone from the audience suggests a scenario which ImprovBoston has yet to encounter, like "two people making love on a canoe."

ImprovBoston is a core of five people who perform regularly on Friday and Saturday nights at the Back Alley Theater in Somerville and starting in November, they'll be playing Sunday nights at the newly reopened comedy cellar at Play It Again Sam's in Allston. This assembly of actors and comedians has been entertaining Boston audiences since 1982. Although there is an ongoing cast, members that stand out on this run are Nancy Walker, Adam Felber and Brooke Thomas. They won't deliver anything short of an onslaught of fresh material that pokes fun at and questions politics, urban living, world cultures and almost anything else you can think of.

However "fresh" the material may be, improvisational comedy itself is quite old and has roots dating back to the 1400's. Felber said the origins of improv began during the Italian Renaissance. In those days, theater troupes traveled around Italy and performed familiar skits but were constantly changing their text. Actors played the same characters for the span of their careers and it wasn't until the 1950's that improv gained recognition as a form of practice for aspiring actors.

In Boston, it's now growing in popularity as an alternative to stand-up - not just one comedian but a team of comedians. Sound intimidating? Probably so, but before you judge prematurely, go and see a few shows. As an alternative to stand-up, improv offers the audience a chance not only to participate but also, to an extent, direct the way in which the show goes. ImprovBoston won't bite but they'll make you feel like they can. They limit their territory to the stage and any poisonous outbursts are at the mercy of their fellow troupe members and not the audience.

So feel safe. ImprovBoston is fun. It's tiresome. And it's one of the best times you'll have in Boston if you're looking for a laugh.

•BOARDER CAFE 864-6100, 32 Church St., Camb. If you're not in a hurry and crave Mexican food, or just margaritas, stop by the Boarder Cafe. Always crowded and noisy, its a favorite haunt of college students and young professionals. The walls are adorned with animal skulls and sombreros for that Southwestern feel. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOATHOUSE 491-6476, 56 JFK St., Camb. This Harvard Sq. institution caters to Harvard students and recent grads. The small outdoor patio is fun in the summer. Inside it's nearly always crowded. No cover. Casual dress. Tell the bouncer that you're from Yale and get in for half price.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks, and the guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis makes you feel like you've left Boston proper for the tropics. The crowd is young and the music often live. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BOSTON BILLIARDS 536-POOL, 126 Brookline Ave., Bos. Voted #1 billiard club in the nation in '91, this modern-day upscale pool hall has the comfortable feel of a living room. The crowd is a wide mix of ages and professions. Located just outside Kenmore Sq. Free pool lessons Mon. nights. Waiters bring drinks to your table. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOSTON GARDEN SPORTS CAFE 723-6664, 120 Causeway St., Bos. If you couldn't get tickets to the Garden but still want to enjoy the game atmosphere, stop in at this mini Garden museum and watch the game on big screen TV. Enthusiastic crowd. No bandwagon fans here! No cover Casual dress. Bruin players sometimes drop in. Closes early on non-game nights.

•BOSTON RAMROD 266-2986, 1254 Boylston St., Bos. An active gay bar in the Fenway area. Patrons range in age from 21 to 50+. Appetizers served Mon.-Fri 5-8pm. Tue. is two-step night, featuring country and western music. Thurs. and Fri. are leather nights.

•BOSTON SAIL LOFT 227-7280, 80 Atlantic Ave., Bos. A popular waterfront bar with a full menu and view of the harbor. The crowd is young and on the move - lots of professionals and business people. With a superb harbor vista, there isn't much need for entertainment. No cover Casual dress.

•BOW & ARROW PUB 547-6819, 1 Bow St., Camb. An unpretentious local bar tucked away just off Mass. Ave. in Harvard Sq. A well kept secret by several college students, bikers, locals, and dart players. The perfect place to relax over a few drinks. No cover Casual dress.

•BOX SEAT LOUNGE Howard Johnson's 267-3100, 575 Comm. Ave., Bos. A hotel bar popular with Red Sox fans, BU faculty members, and local business people. One of Kenmore Sq.'s few post-college hangouts. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu. Free cheese and crackers 5-8pm weekdays.

•BULL & FINCH PUB (CHEERS) 227-8665, 84 Beacon St., Bos. Everyone knows where it is, but few locals ever make it inside. The TV show Cheers uses the doorway of the Bull & Finch for their opening shot, but nothing else. Still, it offers a comfortable neighborhood atmosphere. Try it at least once. No cover. Casual dress.

•BUNRATTY'S 254-9804, 186 Harvard Ave., Allston A rock club featuring top local talent nightly. The atmosphere is dark and smoky, but once the music starts jamming the place comes alive. Moderate cover varies depending on the act(s). No dress code.

WED 31st.--Call for information

•CAMBRIDGE BREWING COMPANY 494-1994, 1 Kendall Sq., Camb. A light, open bar that brews its own; Regatta Golden, Cambridge Amber, Charles River Gold and Summertime Wheat Ale. •CLUB M-80 254-2054, 969 Comm. Ave., Bos. A New York/Eurostyle club, complete with selective doormen. It's just a small room (actually part of the Paradise), but it attracts a good-sized crowd, good-lookers too. Music is usually DJ dance music, but occasionally live acts perform. Cover varies but is generally steep. The crowd is trendy so dress up; it will improve your chances.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos. Let no man thirst for the lack of real ale is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant which features glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap including Burton's Bitter served at 52 degrees. Commonwealth Brewing Company's proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live bands play Sat. nights. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory, no samples.

•COPPERFIELD'S 247-8605, 98 Brookline Ave., Bos. Traditionally a beer soaked college bar except after Sox's games when Copperfields attracts an avid sports crowd. Large crowds, Juke box, local live acts blaring Rock & Roll and a small dance floor liven the atmosphere. Basketball and video games too. Modest cover Thur.-Sat. Collared shirts are a must.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CRICKET'S 720-5570, 1015 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos. Enjoy piano music and fresh air at one of Faneuil Hall's most visible bars. The atmosphere can provide a welcome respite from the bustle of people in the outside marketplace. The patio is covered by a greenhouse so there is no chance of being rained out. Or try the more traditional indoor section, decorated with wood and mirrors. No cover charge. Casual dress. A cappella singing Tue.-Thur. Live Jazz Sun.-Mon.

•DAD'S DINER 296-DADS, 911 Boylston St., Bos. A restaurant on weekdays. A hopping 50's bar at night and on weekends. Attracts a young crowd - collegiate and professional. No cover. Dress is casual. You'll love the old-fashioned juke box!

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos. This Newbury St. hot spot fills up consistently with singles and college students, not to mention sports fans. Dark and noisy. More action as the night subsides, this is the place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•DIAMOND JIM'S PIANO BAR Lenox Hotel 536-5300, 65 Exeter St., Bos. A hotel piano bar with a relaxed atmosphere. Melt into an oversized lounge chair and absorb the music. The crowd runs the age gamut (from 21 to 60+). No cover. Dress varies from casual to business wear. Tue. night is Jazz night.

WED 31st.--Mary Morgan, Piano Vocalist, is here every Wed. THUR 1st.--Thom Troy every Thurs. and Sat. FRI 2nd.--Harvey Finstein every Fri. TUE 6th.--Chris Neville Jazz Trio every Tues.

•DIVISION 16 353-0870, 955 Boylston St., Bos. An art deco police station? That's correct. This former police station is now a bar and restaurant. They serve monster portions of food. The crowd consists of students and young singles. It's a great place for a fun dinner, but save the romantic meals for a quieter place. No cover. Casual dress.

•DOCKSIDE 723-7050, 183 State St., Bos. A cozy sports bar not far from Faneuil Hall. The crowd is varied - from jocks and business people to singles. Large-screen TV for game viewing. Jukebox music. No cover. Casual dress. More than one Celtic has been spotted downstairs.

•ED BURKE'S 232-2191, 808 Huntington Ave., Bos. As cozy as donning the sweatshirt you've had since high school, this unassuming spot located at the foot of Mission Hill is where students, singles, and working people mix to the sounds of R&B, Rock, and Soul. Destinations for Good Times

"Meet me in Paris for a drink," she said with a sly smile.

Haven't we all wanted to say that at least once in our lifetime? Now you can!

No matter what your final destination is, you'll find it at Destinations; an enormous new restaurant, night club, and sports bar all in one, located at One Congress Street.

The tables, the bars, and the walls all showcase original artwork of maps, linking the world together in the nightclub. The maps offer a convenient meeting place — "Meet me in London." "I'll see you in Munich." Oh, get creative: "Let's have a drink in Sumatra."

The $1.5 million entertainment complex includes a sports bar, restaurant and dance club. So, whatever your destination, let it start at this new raging hot spot.

"The concept of Destinations is for people to be able to come and be able to afford a really nice dinner for as little as possible," said General Manager Arthur Divas. "This way, after you finish dinner, you can enjoy a little dancing."

The sports bar, features Bruins, Celtics, Red Sox, and Patriots memorabilia. Publicity Director Lauren Birmingham said that to please Boston's sports fanatics, they will also present international sporting events on a wide-screen television.

"There are a lot of executives in this area: lawyers, businessmen and government employees," she said. "We're offering that upscale, Yuppie crowd a nice sports bar and recreation room where they can let off a little steam. "One way they can is by shooting basketball at a Coors Light Sharpshooter, Destinations is only the second bar in Boston to carry one.

The dance club portion of Destinations will show off the largest dance floor in Boston with a dancing capacity 600 patrons.

The maps are just one of Destination's clever themes. What really sets this dance club apart is that it resembles an airport runway. Long ramps and blue lights simulate an airstrip; a runway that could lead you to your dream destination.

There is also a large stage which will ultimately act as a forum for national artists to display their musical talents. Each night Destinations will also offer a different musical genre: "Techno Tuesday," "Top 40 Sunday," and "Disco Friday."

The restaurant downstairs has a decor meant to calm after a hard day's work: mauve carpeting, flower arrangements, and the ever-important full-length windows overlooking the hustle of bustle of Congress Street.

With all of its diversity, one doesn't have to wonder why this entertainment complex's tag line is "It's a World of Pleasure." Who wouldn't want that to be their final Destination?

Don't miss the Grand Opening on November 1st. You could be the grand prize winner of two tickets to the Cayman Islands!

CHASING THE SUDS

by Tobin Streett

Some people run to be healthy. Others run... just to run. But for the Boston BarleyHoppers Running Club, who meet Monday nights at the Bull and Finch Pub, these reasons are non-existent. This crew runs faithfully each week for one reason. To drink!

As a modern example of hypocrisy, the Boston BarleyHoppers have adopted a theme, 'We Run for Fun, We Roam for Foam'. The group's spiritual leader is Ed Doyle, manager and bartender of The Bull & Finch Pub, better known as television's Cheers.

Doyle founded the Hoppers in 1979 with the intent of organizing a group of people interested in running and drinking a few beers - all in the spirit of comaraderie and fun. "I was getting into the sport of running and I've always been a team player, hockey etc... and the idea of going out by myself was a little weird so I thought that it would be an interesting way of getting people together ."

Their first run consisted of Doyle and five women. Within a few weeks, they had increased in number to twenty. Doyle wanted a slightly larger group, hoping to recruit friends from the Bull & Finch, but had little luck. "I tried to motivate some of the regulars here, but they were stuck to their bar stools," he explains. But the Hoppers luck soon changed. At the start of the next season, an article about them appeared in the Washington Post; Their size soon doubled. That year, the group ran faithfully until the end of the season for the club's finale, "The Great Boston Beer Chase". By the time the Chase came around, Doyle was faced with one hundred and thirty applicants. So much for his idea of a small group of runners gathering for a light jog, a few beers and some conversation.

The Boston BarleyHoppers begin their season one week after the Boston Marathon and continue running and sudsing until Thanksgiving when the weather keeps them indoors. During their first few years, the Hoppers finished their season with the Beer Chase that started at the Eliott Lounge and ended with a celebration at Jimbo's Fish Shanty. But all of that ended with increasied awareness of drinking and driving. Today's club of roughly sixty members adds one last atypical jaunt the week before Christmas when they run to the Fulton Street Nursing Home in the North End. They bring Christmas trees, cookies and gifts to the home, celebrating their season finale until they run out of cookies or beer - whichever comes first.

The Hoppers are also actively involved in charitable events. They became involved with groups such as the Special Olympics, on which they worked in tandem with Nike. They have also assisted with the Tufts-10 (Bonne Bell) road race as well as the wheelchair division of the Boston Marathon. Doyle says he hopes to do more.

"I've always wanted to keep it a laid back group." says Doyle . And he has. The BarleyHoppers are comprised of people who work in a variety of professions. Engineers, lawyers, cab drivers, a veterinarian and even a neon artist! And they all get along well with each other. Too well, perhaps.

Wondering if any accidents have happened due to the combination of drinking and running? Twenty two couples who met at the BarleyHoppers have gotten married! It's just one of those hazards that you have to accept if your going to be doing something so incredibly dangerous.

Doyle recalled a story from a few years ago about one hefty runner who fell through some ice and had to be rushed back to the Bull & Finch for some old fashioned 'warming up'. He survived. Unless you consider spilling beer in your crotch to be a major catastrophe, no other mishaps have occurred.

In the old days, the Boston Barley Hoppers used to consume more than just a couple of innocent beers. Doyle says, "We used to frequently receive free rounds, But due to stricter drunk driving regulations, I've toned it down to just a couple of beers and I've introduced some food as part of the program."

When asked if the club was in any danger of losing its members, he said that "membership has fluctuated over the years, partly because of jogging's decreasing popularity as a form of exercise and partly because it's expensive."

How do you join the Boston BarleyHoppers? Call Ed Doyle at the Bull & Finch and express your interest. There's a $25 annual fee for dues and an $8 fee on each Monday for members , $9 for non-members. The annual fee includes a free gift from the Bull & Finch. And get this - all BarleyHoppers receive The Belcher, their own official newsletter.

When do they meet? Every Monday night between 7:15 and 7:30pm. at the Bull and Finch, usually starting their run around 7:45. They run to a pre-arranged pub or restaurant , have a few beers and hang out for around an hour and a half. An I.D. is required and checked at the Bull and Finch prior to departure. After some running and thirst quenching, the hoppers return to the B&F at 10:00pm.

Whatever the reasons, Doyle thinks that the club will survive. They only run one mile each way so any runners new to the sport shouldn't shy away from showing up, shoes on feet and mug in hand, any Monday night in the future. Who knows. Maybe you'll meet your mate.

A GUIDE TO FREE AND DISCOUNT ACTIVITIES IN THE BOSTON AREA

by Jason Gregoricus and Tamara Fort

Rising from the infernal pit of economic recession is the seething stench of leisurely limitation. Where once, in Reagan days of lore, when many of the wanting danced and frolicked in the asphalt jungle, when the need for lively diversion was sated by the gregarious many, now resides only the black residue, the folly of supply-side economics. In these days of our fair city almost everything costs money; the nymphs have departed; the harlequins are sad. But even with these heavy days there lingers in the glances of the shadowed public a glimmer of hope, a grey light in the morning sky. The strapped, the checkless, the poor can still in their scant moments find those jewels of leisure without impairing their nickle-supply.

The Improper Bostonian, champion of the tired, the poor, the downtrodden, is working for all you who have not that ticket price in your pocket, who live from day to day and whim to whim. Our meager resources have been actively seeking the discounted, the inexpensive, the free in this fair towns' stalwart institutions. So before you are left funless, unentertained and intelectually famished we give you this small listing. Rise up! The enjoyment is there; league with us and READ ON:

Recession Proof Banking - The Pawn Shop

by Jannette Tucker

What do you think of when you walk by a pawnshop? A desperate bride selling her wedding band to pay her lover's blackmailer? Or maybe a front for an illegitimate gambling ring? Or maybe it's not even that exciting. Basically, pawn shops have gotten a raw deal in previous years. They were allegedly the recipients of seedy clientele, the down-and-outs, the mismanagers of money.

But the attitude of the public is changing as of late. As the economy dipped, the need and therefore respect for pawnbrokers and their services have enjoyed a steady ascension.

Suffolk Pawnbrokers on Washington Street is one of the oldest pawn shops in Boston. It's a family-owned shop, over 100 years old, and is thriving now more than ever.

Ed Bean calls his business "really very simple," but to the average layperson on the street, his business is an intricate web of money management much in the same vain as banking.

"It's like a bank for people outside the mainstream credit population," Bean said. "To the surrounding community, it's used more like a bank. For the outer ring, it's used for loans."

Bean said Suffolk sets a price for a piece of property - be it VCRs, camcorders, musical instruments, jewelry, etc. - and a price is agreed upon.

The item is then sealed up and not touched until either the customer comes back to buy back his property, paying the interest on the loan, or the pawn shop takes possession of the item after a four-month time limit has expired.

"During that four-month time, no one is allowed to touch the item, not even the employees," Bean said. "The more expensive items we'll keep in a bank vault if people feel more comfortable, although our security system is probably just as good if not better than most banks."

John Wallace, who has worked at Suffolk for the past year and a half, said Suffolk is known in the pawn shop business as giving more time to reclaim items.

"Some people come back over a year later, and a lot of times, we still have their items," Wallace said. "If they pay the interest, we'll let them have it back rather than selling it to them at the price we would sell it for. Even if we've taken title to it, we'll give it back."

Wallace and Bean both mentioned that the difficult, although sometimes humorous, aspect of the job is dealing so closely with people's prized possessions.

Bean said, "We're valuing it, and you have to do that very delicately. It's going to be worth more to them than it is to you, and you don't want to offend them."

Wallace and some of the other employees at Suffolk have been forced to see the humor in some people's reactions to the value that is put on their merchandise.

"We tell them that we're only going to loan them $100 on their ring that they paid $500 for in a retail shop," Wallace said. "They look at us and say, 'Whatchu mean?' It happens at least 10 times a day. It's a standard, silly, stupid joke around the pawn shop because we get it all day long."

The risk for the pawn shops seems minimal, since they are giving only 50% of the liquid value of an item for a loan, and they have the piece of property in their hands, but Bean said the risks are certainly there. "I got stuck with 300 polaroid cameras," he said with a laugh. "I wound up either giving them away or shipping them to Greece."

Part of the old misconceptions about pawn shops came from the pre-regulatory days, when stolen property would launder itself through the pawn shops and out of the hands of the thieves.

But Bean said those days are gone forever since pawn shops are regulated by the police in Massachusetts, and every pawn shop must adhere to those regulations.

"When somebody leaves an item, their picture is taken, much like a check-cashing camera," Bean explained. Their information and the information on their items is sent to the police department. Bean explains that if an item has been stolen, customers will claim that "they just found it." That way, only legitimate people would come in.

According to Bean, "legitimate" has taken on a new meaning at Suffolk.

"We're seeing a lot of business people coming in now; a tremendous amount more than we used to because of the economy," Bean said. "We've seen architects, attorneys - State Street kinds of guys.

"And they want to pawn cars and boats and things," Bean added about his new "State Street" clientele. "If I had the room, I would consider it. Every day is different, every deal is different," Bean said. "We get to see a lot of different things. We once had a violin in here that was worth about $35,000."

"There's definitely a more upsealed clientele," Wallace agreed. "The idea of pawning is so foreign to them that you have to explain it to them more thoroughly than you have to with the regulars. "If they don't offer their story, we don't pry; we're very confidential," he said. "Maybe they have a gambling problem or a drinking problem; I don't know."

Bean said that as the pawn shop has been passed down from generation to generation, so have some of the customers. "There are people we've known for years and years and years," he said. "I just had a girl in here today and I remember seeing her grandmother in here when I was just a kid.

"You see a lot of that," he continued. "Some of them still have credit on their cards, but they want to make sure they pay the money back immediately so they go through a pawn shop. They pay the money back quickly because they want their item back. It's probably more economical for them. It's fast, quick loans."

Wallace said the reason it's more economical is because the interest on the items is only 5% per month.

"A lot of people don't realize that," he said. "It's really not expensive."

Wallace said Suffolk processes an average of 100 loans per day, but chimes "no day is typical. Except it's always busy. "When it's busy in here," Bean added, "it's like the New York Stock Exchange. That's what I like - the hubbub."

Bean said the beauty of pawnbrokering is that people get back exactly what they put in, and that pleases everyone, including himself.

IMPROPER IMPERSONALS

Dedicated to those who wish to get their message across with all the subtlety of a Scud Missile. This is your chance to vent your frustrations, parade your convictions and just be a little mean. Free yourself and let your voice be heard. Send your Impersonals (at no charge to: The Improper Bostonian, 17 Station St., Suite 7A, Brookline, MA. 02146.

Handicapped Parking in Brookline. Sound familiar? 861 KQW blue two door rag top BMW. What kind of sadist would cut me off to take my handicapped parking spot in the pouring rain.

It's the effort that counts. To my neighbor with the hack saw and the blow torch: It's an admirable gesture, but it doesn't work. I tried it. Just pay the ticket.

Thanks a whole hell ot a lot for that goddam set of roses, Bill, you really know how to make a girl smile. I hate you for what you've done don't ever come by here looking for me again. Laura

To my neighbors who keep me up every night with that annoying electric guitar. Please go to hell.

Lisa S. You were great last night. Sorry but we can't ever be seen in public. Please forgive me.

Jan, who was that gargantuan I saw you with last night. You looked so adorable feeding him "Mr. Choo-Choo Spoon." Marry him? Just set him in tront of the TV and let him drool.

Doug, You lying sack of shit. If you ever do that to my dog again I'll beat the living shit out of you with a baseball bat.

Amy, I know you slept with Bob last night. It I ever see either of you two together I'll kill both of you.

No harm done! Gee Stan. I don't know how to thank you! I thought a simple thanks would sutfice but I was wrong. So anyway, thanks for leaving my car on empty; thanks for making the long distant calls on my phone; and thanks so much for leaving your dirty socks all over the house.

Two Balls. That's nght. I'm that had two balls left on my table. Two cue balls after you hit yours onto my table and kept stanng at me. You ruined my game and I lost a $50 bet with my fnend because of you

Thanks for the note but I don't date assholes. Do the world a tavor and donate your brain to science.

John M. You can go to hell with your late hours of work, I've had it with your damn office antics, please stay the hell away from me or I'll quit.

To the asshole that cut me off on the corner of Brookline and Harvard last week, lic 534HYU I have your plate and so does everyone else in my fratemity.

You work hard, you play hard, you give everything you've got to your job, and all you get is a damn bunch of roses on secretary's day. Life sucks.

John, I was just kidding, you don't look like Peewee Herman.

I love you Sarah, but that was last night.

Jimmy, thanks for giving us the keys for the Whaler, we ran into a little problem up at Grave's light. But don't worry, Scituate marine salvage is taking care of everything. Sorry dude. Your pals, Oogie, Slapp and Whiney.

Pia, I adore ya. You're so young and innocent looking, too bad your name is also a verb.

Rey, is it true what they say about your invisible friend?

Mike, Just thought you'd want to know that I finally cleaned our closet. I wasn't sure if you wanted to keep the golf clubs and hockey equipment, so I burned them. Hope you don't mind. At least now I can find my shoes in the morning. Deb.

Warning, Bob B is the biggest slut in the whole town of Newton, stay clear if you know what is good for you.

Gerry, sorry I didn't wake you up this morning. You looked so lovely sleeping on your cold pizza.

Gary, "well. . . ookay", - High-school "Oooh! Aaah!" - College. "Oh God yes! Fill me like a gas station, Conan!" - Honeymoon "White! I think I'll paint the ceiling white." - Last Night. Sincerely Cheryl.

You know how I spell relief? I go out and break your car windows. So tum down your goddam radio and chit chat at three in the moming you guys in apartment 4 on Comm Ave. Yeah you know who I am.

Bob Mc is is true you haven't talked to Sam in some time? I guess we all have our dry spells.

Matt N. They say you're more bean than big.

Cindy, remember when I told you I used a condom. . . well I lied.

I feel like dancing! Oh sweet Regina. We met at the New England Leo Sayer Fan Club and my heart started beating again. But then I started dancing with you. Now I want to put your feet in visegrips, stick slats of bamboo under your toenails, make myselt a turkey club and watch you sweat.

Don't worry uncle Teddy, I told her my name was Smith.

Cindarella, you really did turn into a pumpkin last night. I thought that happened only in the story books. Ciao.

Dr. Rolaids you know that hemorrhoid problem, well now it has spread to my feet. Thanks for the prescriptions. Sincerely, Sue U Lader.

Rich, love me tender, love me true, if I see you with that girl again, I will castrate you.

Mad Mike I slept in your bed last night with your one and only, have fun cleaning those sheets.

Louise, why'd you leave me? Was it the mustard on my tie? The chive in my smile? Or was it the "if you've gotten this far you must be cute" written on my jockeys?

But a Bing! to the Dice impersonator at Fanueil Hall last night you know that pig you picked up at the bar? So does everybody else in Boston.

Tammi, nice dew, you slut.

I need a job. Ex-Boston area communications dean needs work. I'm currently teaching but no one comes to my classes. I'm 5'9", 164 lbs. with big, black circles under my eyes. I am also a famous author, developed the polio vaccine and built the mighty pyramids.

Raul, I don't love you and my mother does not have a "hot set of hooters."

Deb, why do they call you the viper?

B.J. is that a Banana in your pocket or are you just glad to see me?

Josh, what the hell kind of Half Baked idea is that, you're getting a job?

Hey Bill, I know what you did last summer. . .

Calling all the women from the Salem, Beverly, and Peabody areas: Beware of a tall dark, handsome guy bearing gifts from his loins. You can't return them. Sincerely, a safe sex advocate.

Carey, you said you didn't mind when I played in your flower bed as long as I washed the sheets. Right?

Mr Sweeny, when you said to have your daughter home by twelve, you didn't specify pm. Spike. P.S. You're an asshole none the less. Sorry Laura, I couldn't resist.

Tom, don't you think it's about time that you went on a diet? Dude, you and your four chins, your disgusting cigarette breath and your B.O. need a serious vacation. Take a shower and get a little self-respect.

Brendan, If you keep using it at the rate that you do. It will fall off. Love Monique.

To my one and only true lifetime love of all Steven. It must have been another life. I hate you.

Dukakis in '92, the Massachusetts Miracle 2. 1/2 The Smell is near.

How's it hangin now Keith, you had to do it, didn't you?

We know a woman, she's about 5'4", brown hair, brown eyes and a smile that could scare a buzzard off a shit wagon. And she went home with Carl last night.

By, the way Kevin. You've been wondering why it's been such a dry season, we'll keep going around your dorm talking about how long its been and see how many girls come pounding your door down.

How's your car Bill? Remember when the engine started, the paint didn't have key marks and the tires weren't slashed? Look out your window. Have a nice day.

Silver is the big investment in the 90's, yeah right.

Wanted: work in a stimulating environment with high pay, nice co workers and good benefits with a good chance for advancement. Please call 532-4444 if you have any information where this can be found.

Manny, send lawyers, guns and money, the s*#% has hit the fan.

Steve, I don't know how to tell you this. We've known each other for so long. Best friends. We've shared laughter, tears, beers and so much more. And now we've shared something even more intimate. Cindy! Sorry dude. It was late and I was horny. Still buds? Jeff.

For information on how to get out of DWI violations, call Steve at 627-3429

Jonathan, why were there 59 900 calls to Kerry's Kinky Inc. on your phone bill last month?

To my Delta brothers, I think I may have solved the mystery of the missing social funds. By the way, I'm having a great time in the Riviera. See you all next semester. Love .....you know who.

Catherine. Was it true, I can't believe it, you lost what last weekend!?!

Larkins, I'm sorry, no pictures this time, I'll try to work something in soon though. Mark

To the Boyfriend who needs a shave, haircut, a tan and ten pounds, get your ass in gear or I'm heading to RIO solo.

Dearest Kristin, the pickle went sour, I know for sure. Anonymous.

Mary Anne, the inseam woman, dami un bocchino, or we can just go for cappucc. The choice is yours, sincerely,

Mareeeeelizabeth, tend them pigs. And tell that McDevitt boy to go on home.

To Michelle, the woman with the whiney voice and the fat toes, I met you at Anne Taylor last week, you're the one who spilled the Heath Bar Crunch ice cream all over the 1,000 dollar red linnen dress, the security guards caught me by accident, but it was worth the romp in the mattress dept at Bloomie's just the same. Craig.

Teacher next door, you when you thought I was a surgeon you kissed my butt, but when you realized I was only the boyfriend you turned into a bitch. Thank's a lot.

Courtney, cow tipping was a great way to spend a first date. Let's try milking next time. Huh?

Camy, the milkman left in tears, the postman always rings twice and the garbage man keeps forgetting to take out the trash. What's your secret.

To Ronnie, we're sending this message from New York, congratulations on your engagement. I hope you enjoy the Orgasmatron, at least this will never let you down even if Bob does. Love Shawn and Michelle.

12".

Robbie, the FCC seized all your assets while you were away. Sorry, I shouldn't have sold the report.

Hey Laddy, why do they call you that anyway?

Dear Elizabeth, your psychos will come to torture your thoughts forever, but at least you haven't become one of them yet. But sometimes I wonder.

Hey Steve, your bird won't fly no more. My cat had him for lunch.

To John, you think I don't know. But I do. You thought you had covered all your tracks and left no clues, but unfortunately you weren't as smart as you thought you were. You will come to wish that you were more careful. I'll make very sure of it. Your loving wife.

Dear Harry, I can't stand the clogged drains and the shedding on the carpet, and my friends always think you always wear a fur coat.

Sharon, (world's worst joke teller) remember always for the future to place napkin over the drink to get drunk. Don't worry, Steve will always be a phone call away, to explain all to you that you don't understand. Love the Cookie Monster. P.S. Don't forget to send me the chocolate chip cookies from Atlantic City.

I can't tell a lie, Mike did it.

Jane, sorry I missed you when I was in Boston, I hope this note gets to you sometime soon. Rob.

Hey neighbor. You live on Newbury St. You have a dog. A very, very ugly dog who likes to crap on my doorstep every moming. Next time, I'm going to shoot that mut of yours .

Cuddles Welcome home to the good 'ole USA We missed you alot, but now your here to stay, so now lets celebrate the old fashioned way. Bisuteki's eh?

I'm desperately seeking information on a young woman named Tammy with sultry green eyes. I'm not sure where she comes from but I,d climb the highest mountain,swim the deepest sea for her to be with me. Any information 1-900-hot4-you.

Miriam, from the moment I met you I knew you would be the one to fill that empty space that longed within my heart. You have an inner beauty that radiates like a beacon in the night. Sweet buns loves ya!!

Dear Killer, I know you haven't been faithful to me and it wasn't a little birdie who told me. It was the bitch you've been messing around with. AstaLavista BABY!! You're history.

IF YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT TIME, CONVENIENCE AND FREE TRIPS AROUND THE WORLD, TAKE THE TRAIN TO WASHINGTON.

The train takes you from New York to Washington in a little under three hours. The Trump Shuttle covers the same ground in about 60 minutes, gate to gate.

Your train ticket is only good on one specific train, so you have to do business according to their schedule. Your Trump Shuttle ticket is good on any one of our flights (there's one every hour, on the hour, from 7AM to 9PM, in either direction), so your schedule is your business.

You need an advance reservation to take the train and still you won't get an assigned seat. No reservations are necessary on The Trump Shuttle. You get an assigned seat, and there's a back-up plane waiting when a flight is full. Guaranteed.

Flying The Trump Shuttle, you can earn a minimum of 1,000 OnePass℠ miles for every flight (more if you are a member of The Trump ShuttleClub℠). OnePass miles are good for free trips around the world on a dozen world-class airlines, as well as hotel stays and car rentals. The train just takes you for a ride. Nothing more.

It's up to you. Take the train and spend more time traveling than doing business. Or take The Trump Shuttle. And keep your business on the right track.

Letters To The Publisher

Here's what our readers are saying about us. . .

Dear Mark,
I just finished your paper, The Improper Bostonian. And I thought that it was the best paper so far, that I've read indeed. And why haven't I run across this paper until now? Yes, you're right, it is good for reading on all the clubs and eating places. I'm so thrilled! Now, I've just got to beat the other people to it, if I plan on getting one of these good newspapers. I'll be on the lookout for the paper now that I know more about it. I'll look forward to reading the next issue, that's if I can get my hands on it before the next person does.
Thank you and your staff for the good news.
F.A. Barry

To The Improper Bostonian,
Hi! I just wanted to drop a line and say how much I love and appreciate your paper!!! I've been in school (New England Conservatory) for 3 years from L.A. now, and Boston never until now had any kind of weekly paper like the LA Weekly - which I love, crave & need! Keep it up!!!
Linda

Improper Bostonian,
I came across your paper while staying in the Tremont Hotel and found it to be most useful in uncovering many interesting ways to enjoy your wonderful city. The magazine struck me particularly well because of its upbeat and positive style. A welcome approach when everything else in the world seems so bleak. Keep up the good work - you have one fantastic newspaper.
H.S. Mueller.
P.S. Those Impersonals are the most original and hilarious ideas I've come across in some time.

Dear Mark,
Your Impersonals are fantastic! I'll continue to pick up the paper every two weeks just to read this page.
Keep it up.
Susan

To whom it may concern,
I recently spotted a copy of your newspaper in the lobby of my apartment building, of all places. As I detest any kind of junk mail whatsoever, your paper was quite surprisingly a far cry from the many pieces of free mail wasting our natural resources. So long as you continue to offer a healthy dose of reading material, I will continue with pleasure (and at times amusement) to read your publication.
Steve G.
P.S. If you don't approve of adult 900 lines in your paper, then why do you allow adult dance clubs to advertise? Just something to consider in your spare time.

Dear Improper Bostonian,
Any newspaper that can come from out of nowhere and blanket the town like you did is allright! By the way, where did you get the idea for those Impersonals?

Dear Mr. Semonian,
I truly enjoyed your restaurant section, you seem to have come a long way with a critic like Al Stankus doing your food reviews. I also liked your other food columns, but was a bit confused about the nature of your restaurant listings; are they written for the advertisers or the readers. Please make this distinction clear one way or the other. Otherwise, your graphics are fantastic and make the news easier to read. I liked your cover, but couldn't figure out the importance of the girl on the pole.
Jean C.

AROUND TOWN

Brent Blair and Rochel Coleman are Lee and Austin, two feuding brothers in Sam Shepard's electrifying drama True West.

The New Repertory Theatre in Newton is currently staging True West, a non-traditionally cast drama by Sam Shepard. Starring Rochel Coleman and Brent Blair, True West portrays the antithesis of the all-American family. Two brothers - one an Ivy League screenwriter and the other a heavy drinking, wandering thief - are pitted against one another in an all-out struggle for dominance. Directed by Clinton Turner Davis, the drama will run through December 15 with shows Thursday through Sunday. Call for prices, times and reservations.

Shay Duffin as Brendan Behan

Dublin-born Shay Duffin is currently starring in a one-man performance of comic storytelling in Brendan Behan: Confessions of an Irish Rebel, playing at The Beacon Hill Playhouse. The play depicts growing up in Dublin and rubbing elbows with the likes of Joyce, Shaw, Beckett and Wilde. Duffin also stars in The Importance of Being Irish at the Playhouse. Both plays run through Dec. 22. Call 367-3304 for times, dates and prices. December 8 marks Duffins 450th performance of Brendan Behan.

Mercedes McCambridge comes to Boston direct form her Broadway engagement as Grandma Kurnitz in Neil Simon's Lost in Yonkers December 3, at the Shubert Theatre.

Colonial Theatre Begins Phantastic Season The New subscription series for the Colonial Theater has begun and this year's series is sure to be a success. The "Best of Broadway" offers four currently-running Broadway and London productions Including Andrew Lloyd Webber's Phantom of the Opera, Neil Simon's Lost in Yonkers, Frances Hodgson Burnett's The Secret Garden and Buddy:The Buddy Holly Story. The Subscription also includes the 25th anniversary production of the Man of La Mancha, prior to its1992 Broadway engagement. The Colonial has joined with the Shubert Theatre and Wang Center for the Performing Arts to host these productions. Call 482-8555 for information.

Susanna Vennerbeck & Roland Price perform the Snow Scene in Boston Ballet's The Nutcracker

The Nutcracker, a popular holiday tradition returns to the Wang Center Nov. 29. The Boston Ballet will stage 47 performances of this yuletide classic. The show features a full orchestra and over 200 performers, many between 7-14 years old.

Curtain times are as follows: Wed and Thurs opening nights begin at 7pm while Sun evenings start at 6:30pm. All other shows start at 7:30pm. Sat and Sun matinees begin at 2pm. Performances of The Nutcracker will run through Jan. 5. For tickets call Ticketmaster.at 931-2000

Miracle Legion comes to T.T. the Bear's Friday December 6.

Connecticut's answer to the poetic void in music, comes to T.T. the Bear's Place on Friday, December 6. Culling songs from their albums on Rough Trade and their upcoming release on Morgan Creek Records, Mark Mulcahey and Ray Neal are bringing their two new members - bassist Dave McCaffrey and drummer Scott Boutier - for a show that will be part folk, part pop, and completely rock.

Destination Plymouth
. . .371 Years Later

By Moira O'Connor

Just 50 miles south of Boston - an hour's drive down Route 3 - is the birthplace of New England. Here, in Plymouth, the Pilgrims landed in 1620 and founded the first successful English settlement in the New World.

Thousands of visitors a year flock to this self-styled "America's Hometown" to see the many historical preservations, restorations and reproductions commemorating the life for the intrepid Pilgrims from Plimoth, England.

But visitors can also enjoy the amenities of modern living. There are motels and inns, restaurants, cafes and general and specialty shopping, and even a factory outlet.

Plymouth also caters to outdoor and sporting types. The largest town in the Commonwealth-114 square miles -it has many recreational facilities, including a splendid coastline for swimming, boating and fishing, and the 16,000-acre Myles Standish state forest, with nine ponds, camp sites, and trails for horseback riding, hiking, bicycling and motorbiking.

If you're planning a day's outing in Plymouth, it's a good idea to take the Pilgrim Path, a do-it-yourself walking tour past the many historic sites along the waterfront and downtown. just follow the painted path and look for the sign at each site.

Or, you can take the "Plymouth Rock Trolley" for a guided trip through the historic district. You can get on or off at any stage.

A good starting point is Plymouth rock, where legend says the Pilgrims landed after battling the stormy Atlantic Ocean for 66 days in a small, cramped ship called the Mayflower. Next, tour the life-size replica of the Mayflower tied up nearby and marvel at the hardships the travelers endured.

Unfortunately, conditions were no better for the 102 men and women who struggled ashore that December day of snow and sleet 371 years ago. More than half the group died from cold, hunger and disease the first winter, and the survivors buried their dead on Cole's Hill overlooking the Harbor. Today a statue of Massasoit, chief of the Wampanoag Indians who were guests of the Pilgrims at their first Thanksgiving feast, looks out over the waterfront from the same hill.

Other stops on the trail include the Plymouth National Wax Museum, on top of Cole's Hill, where 26 life-like figures unfold the saga of the Pilgrims with the aid of light, sound and animation. Nearby, is the country's oldest historical museum, the Pilgrim Hall Museum, where the exhibits include furniture and household utensils, muskets, pikes and armor used by the Pilgrims.

Other stops on the trail include a number of historic homes such as the Richard Sparrow House; built circa 1640, it's the oldest house in Plymouth.

For a change of pace, visit Cranberry World, a half mile walk from Plymouth Rock and operated by Ocean Spray, the largest cooperative of cranberry growers in the country. Stroll by a working cranberry bog and learn the history of the berries which were enjoyed by the Indians long before the Pilgrims arrived here.

When it's time for shopping and a snack, there's the Village Landing Marketplace on Water Street, where food and specialty shops are housed in cedar-shingled buildings. The downtown shopping area features a variety of shops offering New England crafts and gifts. And there are 24 cafes and restaurants of every description and price range listed in and around Plymouth by the Chamber of commerce.

North of Plymouth on Rte 3A, there's a bargain hunter's mecca called Cordage Park. In 1916, the Plymouth Cordage Company manufactured one-seventh of the world's rope output and employed almost 2,000 workers. Now, the mills have been converted into a factory outlet and specialty shopping marketplace, with a British and an Irish import shop and 10 snack bars and restaurants.

Plimoth Plantation, 2.5 miles inland from the Harbor off Rte. 3, is a reconstruction of the original settlement where men, women and children in period costumes go about their daily lives in furnished, thatched cottages, The actors talk in the various 17th century English dialects, and demonstrate household tasks such as baking and soapmaking. Alongside the Pilgrim village is the reconstructed home of Hobbamock, a wampanoag man who befriended the Pilgrims and lived, with his family, adjacent to the settlement.

The Plantation will serve traditional turkey dinners on November 27 and 29 (Thanksgiving Day is sold out) and 17th century harvest feasts. Advance reservations are required and can be made by calling (508) 746-3440.

Free literature on Plymouth and its attractions are available at the Visitor Information Center, Park Avenue, near the intersection of Routes 3A and 44.

Volunteering - The Highest Paying Job in the City

by Jannette Tucker

Volunteerism is the wave of the future. The next generation has arrived and we're caring and concerned."

Optimistic words from Bob Sullivan of volunteer-dependent Neighbor Care. But are they true? Are people willing to give up their precious free time to help those in need?

Boston is teeming with volunteer opportunities and people are giving themselves in a caring way. The "Me Generation" of the '80s is gone and people are in tune with their need to give. People helping people.

Bostonians with extra time and the desire to help can do just about anything in this town: play with kids in a hospital, paint a house, help redignify the homeless, play poker with the elderly, teach farmers in Honduras about soil conservation, or send a child to Disney World. The options are endless.

Volunteering isn't as much as a sacrifice as you might think. Yes, it takes time. No, you don't get paid in dollars, but the benefits to your heart are immeasurable.

Bob Sullivan's Neighbor Care paints houses for the elderly and low-income people in the inner city, free of charge, in an effort to "Bring Back America, One House at a Time."

"A lot of people wonder what a coat of paint could do to help," Sullivan said. "I believe the house people live in is a reflection of how they feel about themselves. So we come out and make the houses look better. We're talking about empowerment; we're talking about bringing the community together."

Sullivan and a group of volunteers have been painting houses since March of this year. Although Sullivan said he couldn't give the service away for the first two months, the organization is growing so much that they're becoming backed up.

"It's just a real magic moment," he said with pride. "It's so simple and that's what's great. Volunteers come to become part of the community for a day."

All it takes to become one of the 170 volunteers for Neighbor Care, according to Sullivan, is to call him and then show up at Uno's on Huntington Ave. at 10 a.m. on Saturdays.

Something so simple and even more rewarding.

"You don't think you're going to get that much satisfaction out of it, but the volunteers love it because they're really helping someone," Sullivan said. "This is so hands-on and so instant. You see the end result. I wanted to give something back to society and we are."

This desire to give back what you take from this society is often the motivation behind serving your fellow man. Mike Bell, a Berkley College of Music student, as well as a bartender, said that desire became so overwhelming that he couldn't wait to volunteer in some capacity. He spends every Friday morning playing with children on the neurosurgery floor at Children's Hospital after filling out an application and going through an orientation at the hospital.

"I always had the attitude that at some point I would contribute back to society," Bell explained. "I figured I would do it 'some day.' I started to realize as I'm getting older that I can't keep putting it off. I can't just worry about me all of the time. If I'm hit by a bus tomorrow, what did I ever do?"

What he's done now, however, is bring some happiness to children's stressful lives while they await surgery. But Bell said he basically "just wanders around" and finds children to play with.

"It's nice to see them getting into a game of Nintendo or something, especially if they were just sitting there before you walked in," he said. "Or you let the parents take a break."

Bell, who moved from the suburbs of Cleveland to Boston, said his awareness for the need to help grew when he moved here and saw the homeless for the first time.

"That started to put into me that, hey, the world isn't perfect and maybe I can do something about it," he said. "But my goal is not to get anything out of it at the time I'm there because I figure the kids are the ones who need it. Within the first five minutes of being there, I'm not even thinking about me."

Although Bell stressed that he doesn't volunteer for his own benefit, he did emphasize that finding the right match between volunteer and organization is extremely important. "I went to a soup kitchen, but I felt really out of place and it just wasn't right for me," he said. "I found that Children's Hospital almost allows me to make a compromise in the sense that I feel like I'm doing something meaningful and helpful and yet it's something that uses some of the talents I have. I enjoy playing with kids."

Bell admitted that working with sick children isn't always easy. He sees epileptic seizures and children being wheeled off to the operating room all of the time. Sometimes the stress finally catches up to these children.

The Pine Street Inn is Boston's largest homeless shelter, serving 1,000 men, women and children 365 days a year, 24 hours a day. The Inn is run with the aid of hundreds of volunteers every year.

"I played with this kid Jason all morning and then they came and picked him up for his operation," he said. "He wanted to talk about it, so I talked about it with him. He was scared."

Mental preparation is often a requirement to work with people less fortunate than us. John Van De Carr, volunteer coordinator at the Pine Street Inn homeless shelter, said his shelter is a prime example of digging deep within yourself to reap the rewards.

Melanie Dunea

Bob Sullivan is president and founder of Neighbor Care, a volunteer organization that paints houses for low-income and elderly people in Boston's inner city. They have a core of 170 volunteers.

"We provide basic emergency services to the mentally ill, the alcoholic, and drug addicted, and those who are diseased in other ways with tuberculosis or AIDS, that kind of thing," he said. "But it's a very, very rewarding place. We find that most of our volunteers here take more than they give. From coming here, they get a feeling that they have personally contributed toward redignifying men and women who are sort of the outcasts of contemporary society. That's a good feeling."

Volunteers at the Pine Street Inn do everything. They serve meals, hand out clothing, work in the clinic, do data entry, fund raise and even paint.

"You name it, they do it," Van De Carr said. "We'd have to suspend many parts of our program if we didn't have volunteers to help us out."

The Inn began 22 years ago at a small site on Pine Street. Today, there are several sites all over Boston where they serve 1,000 homeless men, women and children 365 days a year, 24 hours a day. They are the largest homeless shelter in Boston, and they rely heavily on the estimated 625 volunteers.

"We have all kinds of folks volunteering for us," Van De Carr said. "We have people from law firms and insurance agencies and all kinds of people."

Van De Carr said he thought volunteerism was increasing in popularity in Boston, but not necessarily at the Pine Street Inn. "We've always had very good response from volunteers, and it's definitely up," he said. "But I think in terms of homeless programs, the community is beginning to tire of homeless people and they want to push on to the next issue that's now in style. Homelessness in general isn't getting the attention that it was a few years ago because it's just not as fashionable, if I can speak bluntly."

Van De Carr said the only qualification needed to volunteer for the Pine Street Inn is a minimum three month commitment.

"We're not interested in people who come in for one day and we never see them again," he said. "But we're delighted to talk to anyone who has some time they can give us here."

In the process, Van De Carr said, you can expect to meet other volunteers from all walks of life as well as mingling with and sharing with some of Boston's homeless people.

"It's all too easy to walk by a homeless person on the street and pretend you don't see them," he said. "But if you come to the Pine Street Inn, you're going to be confronted with those people and you'll walk away feeling like you've made an impact of some kind."

Making an impact usually translates into simply making someone happy, and what better way to make someone happy than making one of their wishes come true? The Make-A-Wish Foundation has been fulfilling children's wishes for the past four years in Boston.

Make-A-Wish started in 1980 in California when a customs agent had a friend whose son with leukemia wanted to be a police officer, so they made him one for a day. Five days later, the boy died and was buried in his full uniform. Make-A-Wish was born. It serves children with life-threatening illnesses who have a wish, a desire, or a need. Some of those needs could be met by simply buying a child a computer. Or they can be a little trickier such as setting up a meeting with Larry Bird.

"Everybody wants to work on the wish," said Bonnie Clark, administrative director for Make-A-Wish in Boston. "It's such a wonderful feeling working for this organization. There's only one paid position, everyone else is a volunteer. People think it's so depressing because we're working with really sick kids, but it's not because the kids are so happy."

The children are recommended to Make-A-Wish through doctors, social workers, or parents, and the children are reviewed.

To become involved in Make-A-Wish, simply call them up, get an application, send it back, and show up for one of the oreintations that occur about once a month.

According to Clark, there are some cases where people can't emotionally work on the wishes. Perhaps a sibling died of leukemia, but they want to volunteer in their memory. Office work, fund raising and publicity can also be facilitated by volunteers.

The wishes, however, take between 45 and 60 days to fulfill, but can be done immediately if the situation is urgent. And the wishes run the gamut of child fantasies, with Disney World still in the forefront of children's dreams.

"About one third of the wishes are trips to Disney World," Clark said. "We have children who want to meet athletes. We have a little boy from Chicago who wants to meet Larry Bird. We had a boy from Florida who came up to see the Grateful Dead. We had a girl from New Jersey who wanted to meet the mayor. Others want shopping sprees, computers, entertainment centers, trips - that kind of thing."

Peace Corps volunteer Roger Lewis is a water resource manager for Koumantou and area villages. There are currently over 200 Massachusetts residents serving in the Peace Corps.

The only qualifications Clark mentioned for Make-A-Wish were dedication, follow-through, and empathy if coming into contact with the wishful children. Then sit back and truly enjoy yourself.

"There is so much self-satisfaction out of helping these children," Clark said. "Most of the volunteers are thankful that they don't have children with these illnesses. But they all have their own reasons for volunteering. Maybe it has something to do with Maslow's Heirarchy of Needs."

The need for giving is a motif found throughout all kinds of volunteering activities, but sometimes that need can be selective. Joan Flamer, a volunteer for Habitat for Humanity, differentiates between charity work and helping people who want to help themselves.

"We don't build free housing," she explained. "We build housing for working people - the ones that fall through the cracks. They're too poor to qualify for a mortgage, but they have a work history and a history of paying their bills."

As with Make-A-Wish, there is only one paid position at Habitat for Humanity, leaving the organization to rely solely on volunteers. "I know that the people who work on the houses come away with a feeling of absolute satisfaction and pride in what they accomplished," Flamer said.

Flamer emphasized that the satisfaction is greater since the future home owners also work 500 hours on the house as well.

"So they are not only paying for the house with an interest-free mortgage, but they're paying for it with sweat," she said. "And I think that's marvelous. They're working for something that they will own and that will become a part of the community. And it's great to see them come to terms with being a home owner and their pride of ownership."

Flamer said the builders of the homes are typically young, college-aged men and women, but that they have no qualifications to volunteer other than "please be here when you say you will be."

If volunteering is more of a commitment for you than once a week, and living conditions and geographic locations are flexible, the Peace Corps is always looking for volunteers with college degrees or work experience in education, special education, math and science, civil engineering, nursing, agriculture, forestry, fishery and even business.

One certainly doesn't jump into the Peace Corps. It's a big commitment, and by having an application process that lasts between three and 12 months, the Peace Corps assures that applicants are genuine.

Applicants are screened over the phone, talked to by a recruiter, interviewed if their skills qualify, and then sent to two-month training before being shipped overseas.

"It's such a big commitment: it's two years overseas, and the conditions aren't the best," said Anne Conroy, public affairs assistant for New England. "You might not have electicity or running water. You have to have a self-understanding to know if you're going to be able to withstand the conditions."

Since 1961, the Peace Corps has sent 5,623 people from Massachusetts. There are 217 Mass. residents overseas right now.

Conroy said Peace Corps volunteering is in an upswing now due to the recession. People are reanalzying their career choices and college graduates are putting off their careers.

Michael Bonfigli recently returned from three and a half years in Honduras, helping farmers with water and sanitation projects and soil conservation techniques.

"I had a real great desire to live in a culture and not just pass through as a tourist," he explained. "I wanted to see if I could help in any way with the skills I have. A lot of it was the feeling that I could learn about different cultures and bring that home with me and share it with others. I feel like I came back with a lot more that I could offer."

That feeling of gaining while giving is the whole idea behind volunteering.

"The kind of human understanding you're going to gain from people who basically have nothing is immeasurable," Conroy said.

In the words of Winston Churchill, "What we get makes a living. What we give makes a life."

The Movable Feast

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN'S RESTAURANT REVIEW

Cafe Louis

by Al Stankus

Scott Saraceno

The Cafe Louis has its own entrance. Tucked into the rear of Louis of Boston between Berkeley and Clarendon Streets is a heavy black door that's fittingly gilded. But if the store is open, I rarely use that door, preferring to reach the cafe through the store. Entering Louis of Boston, I move quickly, giving little more than a cursory glance to the beautiful clothes on my way to the cafe. It was only natural that my luncheon companion asked, "Why do you go this way if you don't look at the clothes?"

"You'll see," I said. It wasn't really an answer, but rather a wishful thought. For this afternoon, the sales staff, men seemingly culled from equal bits of Claus Von Bulow and Evelyn Waugh, were actually with customers? Five "good afternoons" later we made the Cafe. "The record's six", I told her.

A few days earlier, my breakfast partner in Cafe Louis was nine years old. I spared him the walk. "Now this is freshly-squeezed orange juice" he said. Indeed it was, as our waiter was actually squeezing the fruit moments before.

About the only thing that wasn't good at breakfast was the scone. "Just like the English version, but better" read the menu. An approximately strange word play for what indeed was strange scone. Rather than an individual scone, this dry chunk was cut into a triangle from what must be assumed to be a type of scone pie. Dubbed whole wheat and raisin, this scone manifests the problem of pastry that takes the healthy route.

The pumpkin muffin was wonderful. Moist and with just the right amount of spices, it arrived at room temperature. Unfortunately, it was a room that hadn't been heated for some twelve hours. "We'll have to heat it in the oven. We don't have a microwave."

Traditional clothes, traditional kitchen. The time was passed with a fruit plate. Artfully arranged were grapes, strawberries, and a slice of honeydew.

Paul, my breakfast guest, asked, "Who is Louis?" pronouncing it Lewis. I told him Louis was Murray, and quickly asked him, "What sounds better for a clothing store, Louis' or Murray's?"

A lovely room save for the uncafe-like hours (closes at 6 pm), this is the city's best cafe. Like the clothes which are but a few feet away, style, rather than fashion, reigns. The walls are the color of Pommery mustard, a flowered bench hugs the back wall, and the small, inside tables are surrounded by black laquered chairs.

A friend recently joined me for lunch at Louis and was impressed with what she saw. "This is really lovely," she said.

She's a publicist and special events planner, and up until I invited her to join me, didn't know that Cafe Louis existed. But she soon wouldn't forget that it did. The antipasto, despite the addition of freight car tomatoes although the tomato's natural season has ended, in large part because of the grilled vegetables and pan-seared wild mushrooms, is one of the best around.

She rightly raved about the Oriental noodles in peanut sauce, one of the day's special salads. What most would call lo mein noodles were bound with the rich peanut sauce, tossed with bits of seallion, and served at the ideal room temperature. Like the clothes out front, much of the luncheon fare has a decidedly Italian flavor backed with foreign accents. The sandwiches are big.

Thickly cut slices of various kinds of bread hold "earthy" things like the roasted eggplant and roasted peppers lathered with pesto, Black Forest ham and cheddar, and roast chicken with sweet peppers.

I just wish that one side of the bread in my "ham and cheese" hadn't stayed on the grill so long. Despite a clever manoeuvre by the kitchen (turning the burnt side down), it still tasted like carbon.

We ordered dessert and coffee. Pumpkin creme caramel and chocolate hazlenut cake with a scoop of vanilla ice cream from Toscianini's.

"These are amazing."

Well-made sweets have a way of condescending language.

My friend asked our waiter if her coffee came with milk or cream. "Milk. Would you like cream?"

"Please."

"Milk with coffee. I think they're carrying this European thing too far."

BUDGET BITES

FEELING AT HOME IN LULU'S BACKYARD

by Meg Worden & K.B. Williams

Wouldn't you know it - we planned to tell you all about the great new restaurant we just discovered, but before we even finished writing this review, we heard that already, Lulu's Backyard has become Boston's new hot spot. Why? The food is good, but in addition, Lulu's is charming, quirky, funky, eccentric, and above all, fun. The atmosphere is electric, vibrant and exciting - each night drawing in crowds of people of all ages, but especially an eager 20-30 age group. After just one visit, you'll be talking about it for weeks. Here, you can expect the unexpected, like the unorthodox menu layout, the food presentation on mismatched plates, the bottled beer served in a brown paper bag or the cream for your coffee dispensed from a baby's bottle. Here, you can eat outdoors indoors, or inside indoors. Confused? Then just wait until you see the revolving chandelier. As the manager put it, "we're here to break all the rules".

"It's a little house with a big backyard" reads one of the signs on the walls. Outside is a white picket fence and in each of the windows is a table invitingly set for two. The first thing you see on entering is a large old-fashioned washing machine and then "ironing board" bar tables. At this point you begin to realize the restaurant has two distinct identities; the bar area (the "little house") and the dining area (the "backyard"). In the bar area are comfortable, roomy booths,while high up on one wall, a Styrofoam moose head peers shortsightedly over the room. Behind the bar, an old still bubbles away beside an old fashioned oven. Bottles of beer are kept on ice in an old bathtub, and an ancient refrigerator houses the stereo system. The character changes to "outdoors" in the backyard, where the tables are set with checked tablecloths and the wooden handpainted chairs are all different.

And now for the food. Let's start by quoting the manager on this: "nothing costs more than 875 pennies". A lot of it's what Mom would have made for you . . . plus other things. There's homestyle breakfast ($5.50), frosted flakes ($2.00), soup of the day ($2.25), a cheeseburger ($6.50), all-beef hot dogs ($5.50), grilled pizzetta with tomato sauce and four cheeses ($5.00), vegetable stir-fry with sauce and brown rice ($7.00), steak sandwich with sauteed mushrooms and onions ($8.75), but surely the highlight is Lulu's pupu platter ($8.75), which includes a trio of mini cheeseburgers, french fries, a grilled cheese sandwich, a peanut butter and jelly sandwich and marshmallows on skewers, all accompanied by a little hibachi so you can personally toast your own marshmallows.

Resisting all these fun temptations, we decided to put the kitchen to the test by selecting some of the more complex dishes. To start, we shared an order of fried calamari ($5.50); a generous portion of tender, light crisp pieces of squid cooked in a batter incorporating a touch of fennel. It came with two homemade dipping sauces, one a tangy cocktail sauce, the other a creamy tartar sauce. The calamari was delicious, and we were especially pleased that it was served piping hot, having had more than our share of cold greasy calamari in restaurants that should have known better. To follow, we had baked meatloaf ($7.50) and grilled boneless breast of chicken ($7.50), both of which were accompanied by mashed potato, gravy and pan sauteed string beans. The meatloaf, as expected, was just like homemade. It was a very healthy sized portion, hearty, moist and flavorful, accompanied by mushroom sauce. The sauce was nice and went well with the meatloaf. The chicken breast was brushed on one side with barbecue sauce (we would have preferred it on both sides, or maybe just a little more of it), and nice and juicy in the center. The edges, unfortunately, were somewhat thinner, and had been a little overcooked, so had dried out a bit (It was perfect, however, on a return visit). The potatoes were wonderful; they incorporated a touch of sour cream, which gave a nice rich effect, and to our great delight were lumpy, just like homemade.

For dessert ("but only if you've cleaned your plate", admonishes the menu), you can relive the past with mini homemade pies ($4.00), jell-o ($3.00), pudding ($3.00) and assorted ice cream novelties ($1.50). Not everything was available when we were there, so we opted for an apple pie. When we saw how big it was, we were glad we hadn't ordered two; it was definitely bigger than your usual slice. If only it hadn't been heated in the microwave; it would have been wonderful if treated right. It had that homemade appearance, and the filling was authentic tasting, with just the right amount of cinnamon, but the crust was depressingly limp. We do hope that the kitchen will find some alternative way to heat the pies in future, because the way they are served now, it's a waste of a really good pie.

Soon, daily specials like roast chicken will be added to the menu, while every Friday, there is a fish dish. In keeping with today's trends, the kitchen keeps fried food to a minimum, and where possible serves sauces on the side. Eventually, Lulu's will have a full liquor license, but for now, wine and beer only are served. Ten different types of draft beers are offered in addition to bottled beers. We tried the house creation, "Lulu's love juice", a sweet tangy drink made from a "secret" apple wine, cranberry and pineapple juice, served in a shot glass. We also tried the chardonnay; a very pleasant Yugoslavian wine, slightly sweet, with touches of apple. For now, wine is only available by the glass, but affordable bottles of wine will be added to the menu soon, and will include Marilyn Merlot, the rage of California.

We also liked the background music - a very lively sound with a beat; the mix was actually designed by the staff. Service was very good; the staff are young and enthusiastic - they obviously enjoy working there, and who can blame them. The uniform is denim overalls, T shirts and combat boots, and in keeping with the spirit of the restaurant, staff are encouraged to express their individuality by adding any other touch they wish. Our waiter wore beads. Doesn't that say it all?

THANKSGIVING: WHAT'S COOKING IN BOSTON RESTAURANTS

by Marge Chryssostomidis & Peter McNamara

Traditionally, Thanksgiving is a time for families to get together at home for a celebration, but what if the family is too far scattered to make a reunion possible? Whatever the reason, lots of people find the idea of dining out at Thanksgiving appealing. Because many establishments close for the day, finding a nice place to eat can be both frustrating and time consuming, so we set out to do this for you. At the time of going to press, many restaurants (especially those in hotels) hadn't yet finalized their menus, but were able to provide some basic details. Unless otherwise indicated, all restaurants are in Boston or Cambridge, and reservations are required. Bon appetit!

Traditional Meals: If you have your heart set on a traditional turkey dinner, check out the following places: Barrett's on Boston Harbour (Charlestown),tel. 242-9600 has a turkey dinner ($11.95), plus swordfish provencale ($16.95), prime rib ($15.95), seafood scampi over linguine ($14.95), stuffed pork chop ($14.95) and blackened salmon ($15.95); hours 11:00am-7:00pm. The Bennett Street Cafe (Charles Hotel), tel. 661-5005 will offer its regular menu plus appropriate specials between 6:30 and 10:00pm. The Cafe Rouge (Park Plaza Hotel), tel. 457-2272, offers a turkey dinner and a container for take-home leftovers from 11:30 to 3. The cost is $23.00 (children $15.00); and includes parking. The Chart House, tel. 227-1576 has a turkey dinner for $18.95 for all you can eat (about $10.95 for children under 12), plus the regular menu. There is also complimentary valet parking. Hours are 1:00-7:00pm. The Dover Grill & Cafe (Brookline), tel. 566-7000 will serve a Thanksgiving dinner between 11:00am and 5:00pm. Choose between turkey, ham and salmon for $19.95. Children Half Price. Frank's Steak House, tel. 661-0666 offers a roast turkey dinner or baked ham with raisin sauce, both priced under $10.00, plus selections from the regular menu. No special children's menu, but there will be dishes suitable for children. Seatings are every 60 minutes from 11:30am-7:00pm. Houlihan's, tel. 367-6377 has a turkey dinner with "seconds on us" for somewhere between $9.95 and $10.95; children's portions are also offered. The regular menu is also available; hours are 11:30 - 7:00pm. Parker's (Omni Parker House), tel. 227-8600 will serve a 4 course a la carte menu for $34.00 ($16.00 for children under 12); hours are noon-6:00pm. Parmizzano's (Marriott-Cambridge), tel. 494-6600, will have a special menu with prices ranging from $16.95-$21.95 ($9.95-$10.95 for children) served from12:00 noon-8:00pm. Peppercorns, tel. 661-2022 is serving a turkey dinner ($11.00), plus baked scrod ($8.99), prime rib ($12.99), a 12 oz.steak ($11.89), and baked ham ($7.99). A limited children's menu is offered for $3.99 (ages 4-12). Opens at noon. The Ritz Hotel Cafe, tel. 536-5700 has a set menu for $39.00 ($21.00 for children), and is open from noon until midnight. The Spinnaker (Hyatt Regency) will have a set menu for $26.95 ($13.95 for children) from 2:00-9:00pm. Top of the Hub, tel. 536-1775 will be open from 11:30- 10:00pm. 1280 Beacon (Brookline), tel. 232-1280 has roast turkey, prime rib, baked stuffed lobster and roast duck, all priced at $13.95 for a complete meal. No children's menu is offered. Hours will be noon-8:00pm. Victoria Station, tel. 542-7771 will offer a turkey dinner for $12.95, plus the most popular items from the menu, and will be open from 12:00am-9:00pm. There will be children's dishes available.

Something a bit different: If you feel you've had too many traditional turkey dinners, and want a change, then perhaps you'd like to investigate the following restaurants, which either offer contemporary interpretations of old favorites, or include ethnic dishes alongside the traditional: Aujourd 'Hui (Seasons Hotel), tel. 451-1392 will offer a set menu ranging from $40.00-$48.00; half price for children 6-12. The style, as always is nouvelle, and the hours are 12:00am-8:00pm. The Averof, tel. 354-4500 will have some set dinners for $15.95 ($6.95 for children 5-12): roast turkey; roast ham with yams; roast leg of lamb; or roast sirloin. In addition, the full middle eastern menu will be available. Hours are noon-2:00am with live entertainment starting at 8:30pm. Hampshire House, tel. 227-9600, has four course dinners for $39.95: roast turkey with sweet sausage dressing, shitake mushroom gravy, cranberry walnut sauce, or roast sliced beef tenderloin with glazed shallots and cabernet sauvignon sauce, or char-grilled salmon filet crusted with fresh herbs, with native corn relish. A separate menu for children under 12 is offered at $19.95. Seatings are from 1:00pm-8:00pm. The Harvest, tel. 492-1115 puts a great deal of emphasis on fresh produce, and won't design the menu until shortly before Thanksgiving. They hope to include turkey (served the traditional way), plus their creative versions of prime rib, fresh fish as available, glazed ham, duck, venison, and perhaps pheasant and wild boar. Appetizers will be about $6.00-$8.00, entrees in the mid $20's, desserts about $4.00-$5.00. Hours will be noon-5:00pm. Julien (Meridien Hotel), tel. 451-1900 will offer a four course meal cooked in the contemporary french style for $49.00 ($25.00 for children under 12). Guests will receive a souvenir menu; hours are noon-6:30pm. Marino's, tel. 868-5454 is offering an "Italian" Thanksgiving menu: the first course is olives stuffed with veal, prosciutto, mortadella and parmesan; puff pastry with lobster, mushrooms, black olives; three cheese rolled pasta; pasta shells stuffed with mushrooms, white wine, tomato and shrimp; then comes pumpkin ravioli in white sauce, turkey stuffed with prosciutto, sage, breadcrumbs, parsley and apples, served with carrot puree and cranberry sauce. Dessert is a choice of ricotta and chocolate cannoli or pumpkin pie. The price is $29.95 ($12.95 for children under 12). The regular dinner menu is also offered. Reservations cannot be made until one week in advance. Hours are 1:00-7:00pm. Rarities (Charles Hotel), tel. 661-5050 will have a turkey dinner for $37.50, plus selected a la carte dishes from its regular contemporary New England style menu, probably including salmon, sole, saddle of lamb and lobster, with prices ranging from $18.00-$29.00. Desserts will include peaches and strawberry shortcake. Seatings are from 3:00-8:00pm. The St. Botolph Street Restaurant, tel. 266-3030 has a five course menu, the price varying with the entree selected (children half price). The main dishes are traditional turkey ($24.50), grilled Atlantic salmon with lemon-garlic-olive oil sauce with grilled asparagus, roasted red peppers and wild mushrooms ($29.50), grilled swordfish with shrimp and 3 mustard beurre blanc ($34.50), grilled beef tenderloin with pancetta and thyme demiglace ($34.50) and roasted sliced loin of lamb with tarragon fettucine, goat cheese and spinach ($35.50). Hours are 1:00-7:00pm. Veronique (Brookline), tel. 731-4800 will offer stuffed turkey breast and roast leg of lamb as part of a three or four course dinner for $19.95 ($11.95 for children). In addition, 12-14 dishes from the regular (french) menu will be available. Hours are 11:30am-8:00pm.

Buffets: Having trouble deciding? Then perhaps a buffet is the answer. The Bennett Street Cafe (Charles Hotel), tel. 661-5005 is serving from noon-4:00pm; price is $27.50 ($13.75 for children). The Cafe Fleuri (Meridien Hotel), tel. 451-1900 is seating from noon-4:00pm; price is $34.00 ($17.00 for children 5-12). A clown will provide entertainment for the children, who will also be presented with pilgrim and indian headgear. The Cafe Promenade (Colonnade Hotel), tel. 424-7000 is open 11:30am-4:00pm, price $26.00 ($13.00 for children). The Cafe Suisse (Lafayette Hotel), tel. 451-2600, ext. 3082, will have roast turkey, roast sirloin of beef and glazed Harrington ham, all carved to order, plus appetizers like wild mushroom tart with fresh thyme, smoked seafood, herb stuffed artichokes; side dishes such as sweet potato and cilantro salad, smoked duck breast with orange and lime, sweet corn and pepper salad; desserts include persimmon pudding, Jack Daniels pecan pie and white chocolate cheese cake. Cost is $24.00 for adults and includes a complimentary glass of Beaujolais Nouveau ($10.95 for children under 12). Seatings are noon-4:00pm. Gourmeli's (Marriott at Copley Place), tel. 236-5800 is open from noon-8:00pm; price is $16.95 ($9.95 for children). Jonah's (Hyatt Regency), tel. 492-1234 is serving from noon-6:00pm; price $25.95 ($12.95 for children). The Ritz Hotel Ballroom, tel. 536-5700 is offering a sumptuous and spectacular buffet that will include smoked salmon and foie gras. Hours are 1:00 pm-5:00pm. Price is $49.00 ($23.00 for children). Rowes Wharf (Boston Harbor Hotel), tel. 439-7000 will include thyme and sage roasted Vermont turkey, pesto-rubbed roast leg of lamb, seared Atlantic salmon, clove and sugar glazed ham, green apple and cinnamon pancakes, and caviar. A low calorie/low cholesterol menu is also offered. Seatings are from 11:30am-7:00pm; price is $42.00 ($15.00 for children 4-12). Boodle's at the Back Bay Hilton is serving a traditional Thanksgiving buffet with all the fixings . The cost is $18.50. Served from noon -7:00pm .Validated parking available. Call 236-1100.

Dining in the Evening: Finally, if you want to go somewhere in the evening and don't necessarily want turkey, there's the Club Cafe, tel. 536-0966, where the lounge only will be open from 3:00pm-1:00am; their light menu is being offered. In addition TGI Fridays, tel. 266-9040 will open from 5:00pm-11:00pm, serving the regular menu (though planning to include roast turkey as a special).

by Al Stankus

Only the Fourth ol July rivals Thanksgiving as the "great American holiday." But on the Fourth, the spirits that are part of the festivities are more apt to be an icy cocktail or a few cold ones and not a serious wine.

Thanksgiving is a different kind of celebration. Although Canada commemorates a Thanksgiving in mid-October, ours is a uniquely American celebration of our harvest. While we feast on food like roast turkey, cranberries, squash and pumpkin pie, few would lind a problem pairing the fare with French wines, champagne and cognacs. But they should suppress whatever urges they have, as this is the one day that all foreign spirits should remain locked in the cabinet. A celebration of America's harvest cries for American wine.

The first wines made in America were fruit wines. Although authentic, they carry tradition a bit far when it comes to the actual meal. However, the West County Cider made in Deerfield or the Nashoba Valley Apple Wine make excellent aperitifs. Both are surprisingly dry, easy to match with a wide range af appetizers and even quite nice by themselves. A plus for the West County is its low alcohol content (less than 6%), an important consideration on a day which involves a good deal ol celebrating.

Sparkling wine is synonomous with celebrating. Unfortunately, American sparkling wine has a way to go if it hopes to ever catch the French. But we must be true to our thesis. To this palate, the Roederer Estate is the best sparkling wine made in this country. There's good fruit, lively bubbles, and a long finish of grapefruit-like llavors. Another good choice, and more affordable, is the Domaine Chandon Blanc de Noir. Like the Roederer Estate, this is the result of another French-California collaboration. A lovely pink sparkler, our wish is that the Domaine Chandon would linger a little longer on the palate.

White wine drinkers who would like to start with one wine and carry it through the meal have more options than a Wall Street trader. From New England, Crosswoods, a Stonington, Conn. winery uses Long Island grapes to make its Ressler Vineyards Chardonnay. Benefitting from oak, this rich wine throws off hints of pineapple and butterscotch.

More austere than the buttery Crosswoods Chardonnay is Sakonnet Vineyard's Vidal Blanc. Made from a hybrid grape grown at the Rhode Island Vineyard, the Vidal Blanc is Bordeaux-like, and like the Crosswoods Chardonnay, it's another good example of how far New England wine-making has progressed in just a few years.

From California, some of my favorite Chardonnays include Sanford, Kistler's Dutton Ranch, Macrostie, Burgess, Far Niente, and Cakebread. Their lush fruit seems suited to turkey as well as what can be a palate-boggling cacaphony of flavors.

Although a rich chardonnay would be my choice for the butternut squash soup, I prefer a red wine lor the turkey and its many accompaniments. From Washington State, both the Columbia Crest and Hogue Cellars Merlot are lriendly enough to match the meal. Crosswwoods from Connecticut and Palmer lrom Long Island are two other turkey-friendly Merlots.

For those who like big red wines, Zinfandel is the ideal choice. A grape that's only grown in America, for that reason alone, it makes sense to open a deep-toned Zinfandel on Thanksgiving. And it's robust taste is of course another reason. Good turkey "zin" include Quivire, William Seylem, Ravenswood and Sausal.

Maybe I'm partial to Burgundies, but I find West Coast Pinot Noirs to be the ideal American wine for Thanksgiving. Their cherry-like flavors, seemingly-lighter tones, and beguiling finish match well with the disparate dishes on the Thanksgiving plate. Acacia, Robert Mondavi, Caymus, Robert Stemler, Rodney Strong, Bethel Heights, and La Crema all make Pinot Noirs ideally suited to the Thanksgiving meal.

Of course we know that a 10-year old Tawny Port or even a Late Bottle vintage port goes well with pumpkin pie, but American dessert wines might even do better. The Nashoba Valley Peach is always a post-dinner pleasure, not to mention bring a fine traditional choice. Other deliciously-sweet American tastes in bottle can be found in the Ferrari-Carrano Eldorado Gold, Joseph Phelps Late Harvest Riesling and DeLoach's Late Harvest Gewurztraminer.

The Improper Bostonian's Restaurant Listings

If you feel like broadening your dining experience venture to Addis' cozy basement quarters nestled in the South End. When eating Ethiopian, prepare to relax and revel as much in the process as in the cuisine itself. Sit on low seats around the mesob, an intricate straw table on which the meal is served. Drink a bottle of tej, Ethiopian honey wine, and eat with your hands,- using injera, a tasteless, white spongy bread, to scoop up "yummy" dishes of vegetables, and chicken or lamb seasoned with spices such as curry and turmeric. If you dine with a close friend, feed each other in Ethiopian custom. Open daily. Reservations accepted. Closed Tue.

The Averof
1924 Mass Ave., Camb. 354-4500
A, D, MC, V
Travel to Greece and dine on delectable lamb, beef, chicken and seafood dishes. Though lamb seems to be the specialty here, you wouldn't he disappointed if you tried the grilled vegetable kabob. Sink your teeth into the spanokopita(spinach cheese pie) if you're really hungry. Open Mon-Wed., 11-1am, Thur.-Sat., 11-2am. Sunday brunch 11:30am-5pm.

A big hello to Daddy-O's, which opened on October 23 at 134 Hampshire Street, Cambridge, telephone 354-8371. Owners Ellis Seidman and Paul Sussman describe the food as "old favorites with a new spin", and "the kind of food that chefs would cook at home for their families". Prices are low and portions are generous; open for lunch and dinner Tuesday - Friday, brunch on Saturday and Sunday, and dinner on Saturday.

Another welcome, this time to Andre Chouvin, the new chef at Julien in the Meridien Hotel. He represents the renowned Auberge de l'Ill in Alsace, whose owner, Marc Haeberlin, is now consulting chef to Julien. The new menu will be officially introduced on November 23.

Time flies - already it's four years since Watertown's On The Square first opened. To celebrate, an anniversary dinner accompanied by specially selected wines, will be served on December 5 to the sound of the Bo Winiker orchestra. $50 of the $125 price will be donated to the Dana Farber Cancer Institute. For reservations and information call 923-1522.

Looking for something different to do on Sunday evenings? Why not try The Wine Cafe at Icarus at 3 Appleton Street, Boston, telephone 426-1790. Every Sunday, you can try inexpensive tasting portions of 6-10 different dishes, accompanied by a selection of about 6 different wines available by the glass or half glass. The Wine Cafe is open from 5:30 - 10:00pm; the regular menu will also be available.

Children will love the Alice in Wonderland Tea Parties, which are being held every Saturday through December 28 at the Boston Harbor Hotel. Entertainment is provided by the Boston Children's Theatre, and seatings are 1:30 - 3:00 and 3:30 - 5:00 at a cost of $15.00 per person. For reservations and information call 330-9355.

Visions of Sugar Plums on December 7 and Gifts From the Kitchen on December 3 are but two of the enticing seasonal classes currently being offered by the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts. For information on these and other classes, call 354-3836.

If you are looking for a naturally-raised, chemical-free turkey, the Market at Ristorante Marino, 2465 Mass. Ave., Cambridge will have both fresh and cooked birds during the holiday season. To order, call 868-5454.

Kudos to Michael's Waterfront. For ten years now, they've opened up the restaurant and their hearts to the area's homeless on Thanksgiving Day. In collaboration with the Massachusetts Coalition For the Homeless, free Thanksgiving meals are prepared and served to the homeless by volunteer staff (the food is donated by their purveyors). The entire restaurant is given over to this generous gesture.

Talking of holiday giving: for every guaranteed dinner reservation on Thanksgiving Day at the Boston Park Plaza Hotel, a dinner for a family at the Long Island Shelter will be prepared and delivered to the Shelter by the hotel.

A celebration that many of us have heard of, but few have seen is the Swedish Festival of Lights. Thanks to the Boston Harbor Hotel, you'll be able to participate on December 8 from 3.00-6.00pm. There will be a Scandinavian food and crafts bazaar, a candlelight Saint Lucia procession on the Rowes Wharf waterfront, plus folk songs and a smorgasbord in the Harborview Lounge. For tickets and information call 330-9355.

Yet another seasonal celebration takes the form of a traditional Chanukah Family Dinner Party, which will be held at Rowes Wharf Restaurant on December 8 from 5.30-9.30pm, with a lighting of the Menorah at 6.30pm. For more information, call 330-9355.

Celebrities are no strangers to the Lenox Pub and Grill, and the latest to be spotted there was Goldie Hawn. She and Steve Martin had been in town for the filming of their new movie, House Sitter. Some scenes from the movie have been shot in the nearby Cafe Budapest.

We have news for you Ralph Lauren fans: We heard on the grapevine of his plans to open a chain of (designer?) steak houses, the first to be located outside Southampton, LI. The company will be raising its own ranch-fed beef in Montana. We hope he hasn't retired those polo ponies!

B&D Deli
835 Beacon St. & at 1653 Beacon St., Bos. 859-0087
Be sure to try out this informal and modestly priced deli where eggs are pan-fried to order and 16oz. bloodies cost just $2.75. Menu highlights include unbelievable omelettes and cheese blintzes. Open from 7am to 2pm daily for brunch. Delivery available.

Barrett's on Boston Harbor
2 Constitution Plaza, Charlestown 242-9600
Take in a stupendous view of the USS Constitution while you savor this buffet-style brunch. Barrett's is also reputed to have the largest Chocolate Bar in Boston - if you can't handle the sugar high, you can still admire the chocolate sculptures and lollipop trees. $15.95 (all inclusive); $7.95 for children. Brunch Sun. 10am-2:30pm. Reservations for parties of 5 or more. Parking available.

Blue Diner
178 Kneeland St., Bos. 338-4639
When was the last time you were at an original 40's diner? This kitsch joint is decorated with red neon, antique booths and a vintage jukebox. Try luxurious two-inch challa bread French toast, sour cream flapjacks or ployes (pancakes made of wheat and buckwheat flour and then rolled up sleeping-bag style). Brunch is served Sat. and Sun. 7am-4:30pm and, for night owls, from midnight to 7am during the week. Dress funky.

Bennett St. Café
1 Bennett St., Camb. 661-5005
Raw lish for breakfast? Why not!?! You sushi diehards and adventurous eaters will be impressed with Bennett's casual buffet brunch. Set in a safari-like atmosphere, Bennett's offers a wide selection of raw oriental seafood dishes as well as freshly cut meats. Unlimited juice and coffee to wash it down. Courtyard dining available. $24.50 for all you can eat; $15.50 under 12. Brunch Sun. 11am-2pm. Reservations.

Café Florian
85 Newbury St., Bos. 247-6600
Homemade granola, omelettes with café potatoes and chicken café florian (chicken salad with pineapple cubes) are some of the hot menu items at this Euro-café in the heart of Boston. The champagne cocktails and hand-cut sandwiches are also excellent. Indoor/outdoor dining with an expansive herb garden! Sun. 10am-10pm.

Capucino's
1370 Beacon St., Brookline 731-4848
Located in Coolidge Corner, this "authentically Italian" café offers a scrumptious buffet brunch. Fresh fruit, hot and cold pasta dishes and baglettes are just some of the buffet items you can nibble on while imbibing such complimentary beverages as amaretto milk punch. A Buck A Book

Need some cheap reading? That book you saw on last year's best seller's list can now be found for only a buck.

That's right - one dollar.

Last month, Boston saw the introduction of Buck-A-Book, 553 Boylston Street.

"It's a neat idea that we thought we'd try, and it just exploded for us," said manager Laura Killarney. Killarney said 90% of the books are one dollar, with the rest being $8 to $15 for the art and coffee table books that would retail for $50 to $100.

Buck-A-Book manages such low prices by buying publishers close-outs and capitalizing when hard cover books are printed in soft cover. "The publishers would rather sell them for even a little money instead of destroying the books," Killarney said. "You won't find any current best sellers, but we will get them a year later."

Plan to spend a lot of time in Buck-A-Book, however, since there isn't any order to the books, forcing you to do some hard-core browsing. The titles are always changing, so pick up that book now because it might not be there tomorrow. "That isn't so hard," Killarney said. "People think, 'Yeah, I was interested in that book a year ago. For only a dollar, I'll try it.'"

State of the Art Computerized Art

On exhibit at the Computer Museum now through Feb 1 is the 1991 SIGGRAPH Traveling Art Show featuring works by computer artists and designers from around the world. It includes two and three-dimensional works, stereo images, animation and interactive installations, including one where visitors create and keep their own art. Don't miss this visionary showcase of an exciting new medium.

The computer museum, the only one in the world, explores the impact and evolution of computers - everything from massive first generation computers, to the latest breakthroughs in artificial intelligence and computer graphics . Visitors are educated about computer technology through over 100 hands on exhibits. Located at 300 Congress St., the museum is open Tues-Sun, 10 a.m.-5 p.m.. Admission is $6 for adults and $5 for students and seniors. Kids under 5 are free. For more information call 426-2800.

This Week's Dish: Cactus Club's Prairie Oysters - They're the Balls!

What can we say? OUCH! Our specialty-foods critic, Seymour Kaubaulz rates this weeks dish, "Prairie Oysters" as an excellent choice. Executive chef Carrie Kellerby describes the preparation process as such: "I don't personally remove them, although there are times when I could, but they are cut off and then we remove the inner organ from the sack, slice them [the "balls"] into medallions or "strips", marinate them in wine and spices, dip them in egg and corn sour mixture and then drop them into hot oil quickly for about 45 seconds. They are then drained and served on a plate with jalapeno vinegar. Sound good enough for seconds?

Year Of The Bear

The oldest and the ultimate toy store in the country has moved its flagship store a block away from their old location to 440 Boylston street. And with the new store comes what is believed to be the largest teddy bear in the world - a 6,000 lb., 12-foot-tall, 8-foot-wide bronze teddy bear statue. According to president Peter Harris, the bear is "a special gift to the children of Boston" and will permanently sit at the front entrance. FAO Schwarz has two floors of toys that range from stuffed animals, dolls and vehicles to games, clothing electronics and musical instruments. Walk through the front door into a world of fantasy as your greeted by a live toy soldier who stands in front of The Clock Tower, a 22-foot- high clock that dances, marches, talks and sings. The store has over 30 individual shops including "The Bear Market", "Games People Play" and "Curiosity and Surprise". Stop in for an exciting "not just for kids" shopping experience or call the Talking Toy Authority hotline at 262-5900.

Take the Train

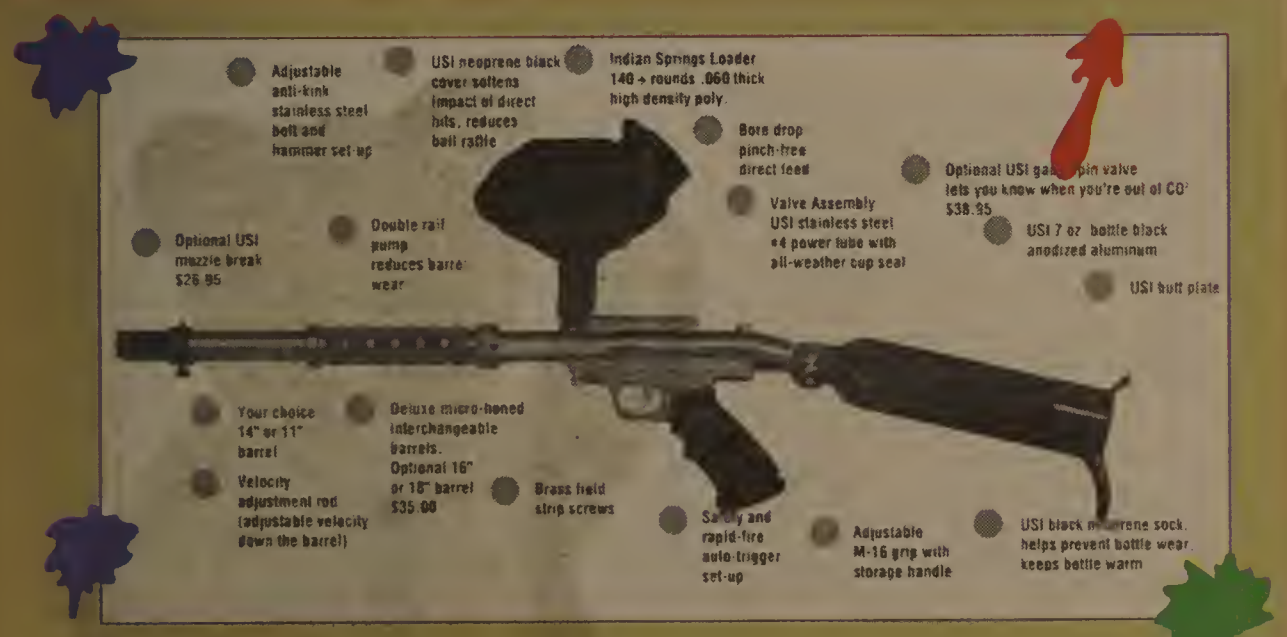
Head down to South Carver and spend a great day at the Edaville Railroad. Here you will find one of the country's largest Christmas displays as well as an authentic steam train that will carry you through five and a half miles of "Winter Wonderland" in Edaville's own cherry-orchard. "Christmas Fest," as it is called begins November 1 and ends January 5.

The railroad is open daily, from 4:00 to 9:00 on weekdays and from 2:00 to 9:00 Saturday and Sunday.

Call the Edaville Railroad at (508) 866-4527 for more information.

Bitchin' Brew

Getting tired of the same old beer, weekend after weekend? How about going back in time and popping open a brewsky the way the Pilgrims did during the Thanksgiving holidays.



The Cambridge Brewing Company specializes in adding a little zip and bite to their specialty beers, and in honor of Thanksgiving, they're brewing up vats of English Bitter.

Hot on the tails of the CBC's Halloween-inspired pumpkin ale, the English Bitter is as authentic as it was in the days of old when the Pilgrims first raised their glasses in toasts of thanks.

"We call it our Bitchin' Bitter because it's awesome!" said manager Jonathon Tremblay. "It has a little bite to it. It's wonderful stuff."

Tremblay said to keep your eyes out for other specialty brews at the Cambridge Brewing Company all year round. The year will close with a Winter Warmer with cinnamon and nutmeg.

The Ultimate Sport

Remember the movie, Gotcha!? Now it's a real pastime whose popularity has caught on like wildfire. The Ultimate Sport, a business in Brockton, Mass. brings War to the homefront except it's a little different from the real thing. Picture yourself dodging paint grenades while running through streams and forests on your search for the enemy. On your choice of 100 acres or a two-story, 25,000 square foot indoor facility, you and your team, armed with non-toxic paint pistols, shoot to win against enemy teams. Get an adrenalin rush and relieve some stress by spending a day playing Speedball, Rambo, Capture the Flag and Attrition. For $20 /$25.00 you play a whole day, including paint gun rental, complete head, throat, ear and eye gear and an ammo belt. The Ultimate Sport is worth the ride. For more information, call 508-559-0777.

ARTS

UN-IMPRESSIONED by the Cone Collection

by Hannah Grove & Marianne Sampogna

With all the hype and hoopla over the Museum of Fine Arts current exhibit of the Cone collection of master impressionist works, one might expect images as grandiose as those housed in Paris' famed Musée D'Orsay. Unfortunately, less satisfying visually and stylistically, this show falls short of expectations.

Although not the best impressionist show ever compiled, it does include several noteworthy works by 20th century greats; Picasso, Gaugin, Dégas and Courbet, and provides an evolutionary look at some early Matisse work. Sponsored by Fleet Bank of Massachusetts, the exhibit, on loan from the Baltimore Museum of Art, will be on display now through January 19, 1992.

The "Matisse, Picasso and Impressionist Masters from the Cone Collection" consists of roughly 50 works, many of which are merely sketches and pen and ink drawings. The show, however, explodes with Gaugin's catch-your-breath-beautiful Vihino No Te Vi (Woman of the Mango), 1892, a vibrant depiction of his pregnant mistress, Tehamana, dressed in western missionary clothing holding a mango. Termed the "Tahitian Eve", the subject is portrayed as bursting with life and freshness while bearing Gaugin's unborn child. This solo Gaugin piece renders the rest of the exhibit anti-climactic; the collection is not as impressive or as finished as the first work.

The Picassos are intimate in nature but are not what one typically perceives to be his work. There is one painting from his famous Blue

Woman with Mango, 1892, Paul Gaugin

Period, Woman with Bangs, 1902, and one cubist piece, Study for Nude with Drapery, 1907, which is a predecessor to his ground-breaking Les Demoiselles D'Avignon. The Cone sisters, however, were less interested in Picasso's later cubist work. They preferred his talent with realism, reflected in Picasso's portraits of the sisters and those they knew, and in pictures like Mother and Child, 1922, which they acquired because of its tender mood, subtle color and realistic form.

Dr. Clairbel and Etta Cone were unmarried sisters who lived, travelled and socialized together in the avant garde climate of the 1920's. Befriended by Gertrude and Leo Stein (another American sibling team devoted to collecting and writing on the contemporary art scene), the Cones gained coveted entrance to the private world of Parisian art circles. This introduction, from which blossomed personal friendships between the Cone sisters and several budding artists, was a catalyst to their compilation of master impressionist works.

The close association that developed between Etta and Matisse after Claribel's death in 1929 is made evident by the bulk of Matisse paintings owned and exhibited. The majority are brightly colored, flower-filled landscapes, interiors and still lives. Interiors, Flowers and Parakeets, 1924, Etta's favorite painting, best represents this style. The canvas is a patchwork of colors and textures, depicting rich oriental carpets, ornate wall paper designs and intricately brocaded drapes framing a window overflowing with an outside view.

The most important piece in the Cone Collection is Matisse's Blue Nude of 1907. It marks his transition from Fauvism to an experimentation with human forms, especially reclining nudes. In his later, Large Reclining Nude, 1935, it is evident that Matisse demonstrates a bold evolution from realism of form to geometric abstraction. Three photographs on display, of twenty taken by the artist of the work in progress, capture different stages of the reclining nude. Unfortunately, the significance of these photos which assist the viewer in understanding Matisse's artistic process are not accentuated in this show.

The collectors are perhaps more interesting than the exhibit itself. Educated and exceedingly wealthy, Etta and Claribel were spinsters who indulged in an itinerant life-style well ahead of their time. Annual trips to the continent, and amity with Picasso, Matisse and the Steins afforded them first hand contact with pieces they collected, a luxury unknown to most domestic collectors.

Photographs from their travels to Europe and Asia (on display in the exhibit foyer) depict the Cones as the dilettantes one would expect them to be. From 1905 to 1949, Etta and Claribel amassed over 3,000 individual works of art during their travels including jewelry, furniture and textiles. Many of their acquisitions were intended for personal use, as well as adding to the aesthetic and financial value of their increasing collection.

The most impressive aspect of the exhibit is that these works were actually the domestic decorations of two independent and innovative women. And although the sisters made their purchases separately and had different penchants, they frequented many of the same artists' studios. Alongside the drawings, paintings and sculptures are numerous photos of the Cone's apartments; which make it easy to envision the walls of their Baltimore home literally covered with their art collection. If the Museum of Fine Arts had taken this one step further and attempted to recreate their actual living space replete with collected furniture and period textiles, the show would have greater merit.

Matisse Picasso and Impressionist Masters from the Cone Collection" bring some worthy art work to the Museum of Fine Arts. But overall, it disappoints. The life and work of the Cone sisters, however, serves not only as an interesting and unusual story, but also resulted in a collection that is considerably admirable especially when considered that it belonged to two American women who lived during the early 20th century.

TARTUFFE - A Keen Disappointment

by Nancy Leonard

Louis Turenne as Orgon and John Vickery in the title role in the Huntington theatre Company production of Moliere's Tartuffe.

Director Jacques Cartier and the very talented John Vickery, did such splendid work a couple of seasons ago enlivening Moliere's simply plotted "Don Juan" that their announced re-pairing for "Tartuffe" this season at the Huntington Theatre Company held great promise. Moliere's classic comedy about religious hypocrisy and self-delusion is always popular, and its richer textures allow for considerable artistic exploration. It's sad to say, though, that the Huntington's "Tartuffe" is a keen disappointment. The production is slow and tedious, lacks interesting characters, and is never really funny or fun in its pointed moralistic teachings.

As usual, the Huntington has put a good deal of money into its scenery and costumes, but things seem wrong from the opening moments. The playing space is dominated by a towering mahogany staircase, which bends its imposing way up to several blank doors; and the huge stairway is flanked by sharply sloped walls, filled with tall, undraped windows, constructed from tiny panes. In this odd W-shape, the forward stage, mostly bare, becomes an overly confined area, and somehow, takes on the feeling of an empty factory rather than of a Parisian house of obvious wealth - a key point in the plot. Even worse, the set swallows up the opening speeches of Madame Pernelle, and makes the first scene quite blank and meaningless.

Moliere, with comic shrewdness, lets us know where everyone stands on Tartuffe, before we meet the religious impostor, whom Orgon has adopted and elevated over his own family. His son, and the maid, Dorine, consider Tartuffe a hypocrite and fraud. And while grandmother Pernelle praises his piety, Orgon's brother-in-law, Cleante, urges a return to reason and deplores the false show of holiness. His obedient daughter, Mariane, who loves Valere, is repulsed at the thought of Tartuffe as bridegroom.

With all of this buildup, we are supposed to await Tartuffe's entrance with anticipation, and delight in whatever appearance he takes. In this production, the delay is far more tedious than suspenseful, and the hypocrite's dour appearance (with flowing hair in Pilgrim garb) holds only a small bit of fun. Vickery's Tartuffe does energize the first act with some smarmy overplaying rather than intriguing knavery. Overall, he takes a darkish view of the character, which is neither fully formed nor successful in this outing. He hits, and he misses.

Director Cartier's evening is too dull and slack, and his characters often talk past each other, as though they've only recently met. For all the obvious effort, there are a lot of unfulfilled opportunities and too few bright spots.

The actors are not untalented, but vary in the success of their work. The portrayals need more discipline and detail to engage the audience. Laurie Walters is bright and appealing as the plucky Dorine and strengthens the action with every turn. David Adkins is good as the impetuous Damis. Joan McMurtrey is polished and engaging as Elmire, rebuffing unwelcome advances with a quiet dignity. Louis Turenne's Orgon is juicily obtuse and boldly drawn, but his Falstafflike demeanor suggests a different play.

The reliable Munson Hicks makes Cleante a clear voice of conscience, although he had trouble with his lines. Tara Steinberg's Mariane, pretty and sweet, needs more depth and a larger repertoire of despairing reactions. Her tears could also be mistaken for laughter. Monti Sharp's informal style adds zest to the comic side of Valere, but serves the serious aspects less well. Apart from projection, Etain O'Malley is good as Madame Pernelle.

Hugh Landwehr has designed the staircase-filled set - which should split open, but never does. Roger Meeker's bright lighting effectively marks the passage of time, but seems much too artificial as it streams through the big windows across the action.

John Falabella's 17th-century costumes are colorful and elaborate. The Huntington's "Tartuffe" may improve with more playing. There's comedy at its core, but it needs more punch and discipline to endear.

GRETCHEN HUBER
Keeping an Eye on Things

by Tamara Fort

Gretchen Huber

Gretchen Huber is a local artist based both in Boston and Maine who paints with the skillful eye of a photographer. However she doesn't like it when Boston art lovers call her work photorealism. She'd rather describe her paintings as "realistic work with a lean toward color." Her paintings, so smooth that they're often mistaken for photographs, are rich in color and appear as smooth as their glossy models.

Subjects in Huber's portfolio range from celebrities and landscapes to dogs. These lifelike creations often develop from photographs. Working from these images lends to the exactness of her portraits. One of Huber's beachscapes was created from as many as 20 photos. Beach dwellers from the sands in Connecticut and California were taken from separate photos and placed in one picturesque scene. "Beach scenes sell the best!" These popular creations take Huber around 12 hours to complete.

With works in her portfolio that depict political figures such as Ronald Reagan and a comic portrait of Geraldine Ferraro in curlers, Huber admits that people are not her favorite subjects. "I like having people in a painting, but not as a focal point," she said. "It's hard for people to relate."

So what are her favorite subjects? "Dogs. With dog portraits people are usually very happy with the results."

Having had her work exhibited at The Society of Illustrators in New York City and the Kennedy Studio in Allston, most of Huber's work is commissioned by friends and family. Living in Kennebunkport, Maine has awarded Huber the chance to peek at the familiar residents of this small town.

The Bushwatchers is a Huber original that hangs in the Pan Am building in Boston. Russell Reynolds, a friend of George and Barbara, bought the painting that depicts tourists and the press peeping through the hedges to see the Bushes.

In the course of three years, Huber has created over 120 of these realistic paintings and she isn't slowing down. So if you feel like buying a Huber or seeing a sample of her work, you can visit the Pan Am building or drive to Kennebunkport. It's worth the trip

by Nancy Leonard

"Cole"

The Lyric Stage opened its new season on November 6, in its new home in the YMCA building at 140 Clarendon Street in Copley Square. The troupe was housed for many years on Charles Street, and they retained that location's intimate, three-quarter playing space in the new 200-seat theater. Their opening production, "Cole", is a musical revue, first produced in London in 1974. It mixes some classic and lesser-known Cole Porter songs with a chronicle of his life and times, "Cole" runs through December 1, with performances Wednesday through Sunday. For more information, call 617-437-7172.

"First Night"

"First Night", which opened in September at Theater Lobby in the North End, is extending its run through December 31, 1991, which just happens to be First Night 1992. The heartwarming romantic comedy, by Lowell playwright Jack Neary, has received wide critical and audience acclaim. It plays Wednesday through Sunday. For information, call 617-332-1646.

"True West"

The New Repertory Theater, in Newton Highlands, is presenting Sam Shepard's "True West" from November 7 to December 15. The metaphoric struggle for dominance between two brothers - one an Ivy League screenwriter, the other a street-wise thief - is being cast non-traditionally. Clinton Turner Davis directs. Performances run Thursday through Sunday, with some Wednesday matinees. For information, call 332-1646.

"Lost In Yonkers"

Neil Simon's "Lost in Yonkers", which won the Tony Award and the Pulitzer Prize last year, will play a 4-week engagement at the Shubert Theater, beginning December 3. Set in 1942, the play is the story of two young brothers left in the care of their grandmother, while their father goes off to sell scrap in the South. The grandmother rules the household with an iron fist, and all four of her own children have suffered in various ways. Mercedes McCambridge, who played Grandma Kurnitz in the Broadway company, and Brooke Adams star. Gene Saks, who directed the original, repeats those chores for this national company.

"Lost in Yonkers" is an American Express Gold Card presentation, which entitles holders of that card to purchase specially-reserved seats in advance of public sale, by calling 1-800-448-TIKS.

"Hamlet"

The American Repertory Theater is opening its thirteenth season on November 22 with a British-born production of William Shakespeare's "Hamlet". Director Ron Daniels developed the work in 1989 for the Royal Shakespeare Company, with set and costume designer Antony McDonald, composer Clarie van Kampen, and actor Mark Rylance, who plays Hamlet. The Pittsburgh Public Theater is collaborating on the production. The Cambridge cast includes veteran ART company members Candy Buckley, Thomas Derrah, Alvin Epstein, Christine Estabrook, Jeremy Geidt, Gustave Johnson, Stephanie Roth, Steven Skybell, and Derek Smith. "Hamlet" will continue in a straight run through January 12. For ticket information, call the box office at 547-8300.

The ART also is eliminating official opening nights, and scheduling all week-day performances after the previews for 8pm. The changes, along with fewer invitations to critics and media representatives, are attributed to "belt-tightening". But they've caused a stir in theatrical circles.

"Other People's Money"

By popular demand, "Other People's Money", a collaborative effort between The Poet's Theater and the Trinity Repertory Company, has resumed performances at the Hasty Pudding Theater in Cambridge. It will play through December 1. Claire Bloom follows with a "Portrait of Shakespeare's Women", December 5-8, then "The Flying Karamazov Brothers" December 10-31. for information, call 617-496-8400.

Stars of the Bolshoi Ballet and Company

by Jamen Howe

The first half of the "Stars of the Bolshoi Ballet and Company" at the Wang Center on November 5th and 6th, called "Suite Nostalgique", was certainly memory provoking for anyone who has ever taken a ballet class.

When the curtain rose and the lights came up on stage, the audience became privy to what appeared to be the warm-up class before the performance. Tutus were draped over the backs of chairs and flung into the corners of the stage. A bar in front of a wall-sized mirror faced the audience from the rear of the stage. Four ballerinas with straight backs stood waiting, their hands resting on the bar. The ballet master, played by non other than Vladimir Vasiliev, the Premier Danseur of the Bolshoi, stood by the grand piano, waiting to give the pianist her cue.

The first movement of the dance was the master's hand, running through steps as all ballet dancers do before beginning a combination. The dancers began to methodically perform the traditional barre exercises: pliés, tendus, frappés, ronds de jambe and grands battements. The middle part of the piece consisted of center-floor combinations, where the dancers were joined by the rest of the Stars of the Bolshoi. The suite ended with a series of révérences (or bows), which mark the end of a ballet class and serve as a cool-down period for the dancers. In this case, the révérences signified the end of the piece.

In memory of ballet's masters and to the discipline and the beauty of the dance, the dancers of the Bolshoi ballet provided the audience at the Wang Center with a behind the scenes look at the inner-workings of a ballet.

After the intermission, the Bolshoi dancers treated the audience to the performance of several famous scenes from different ballets. For example: the dying swan from "Sleeping Beauty" and the Grand Pas de Deux from Act III of "Don Quixote". Although the second half of the program was less unusual than the first, these scenes, seven in all, including a surprise addition from "Notre Dame de Paris", exemplified the full talent of the Russian dancers: high grands jetés, perfect fouettés and pirouettes, and bright smiles.

Overall, the dancers showed discipline, lift, poise, grace and emotional commitment. The audience couldn't help but leave the Wang Center with a sense that the Stars of the Bolshoi Ballet had successfully expressed the music and the stories through their movements, as well as shown the full extent of their ballet training.

The Addams Family

Morbid, Sick, Disgusting and So Much Fun!

by Tobin Streett

Who ever thought The Addams Family would make it to the big screen? There aren't many people who haven't either read the comic strip by Charles Addams or seen the cult 60's tv show. For those who haven't, you'll see something as good as the original if you check out The Addams Family, the movie. The Addams Family catches all of the excitement of the original series - and more.

This time around, the masochistic relationship between Gomez and Morticia is as intact as ever, with their shared interest in pain and misfortune evident in their every word. Raul Julia is Gomez, the sword-toting leader of the clan and Anjelica Huston, as Morticia, is sexy and alluring as his torture-starved wife. Together, their chemistry is strong enough to carry most scenes but with the addition of one liners, makes for an irresistible combination that produces nothing but non-stop laughs. It would be too easy to analyze this film in the spirit of a Terry Gilliam production because there are too many fast-paced and busy scenes.

The Addams Family
Paramount Pictures
Directed by Barry Sonnenfield
Starring Raul Julia
Angelica Houston
Christopher Lloyd,
Christina Ricci,
Jimmy Workman

The film opens in the holiday spirit. We're invited to the Addams household for some yuletide caroling with an unsuspecting group of singers. 'Unsuspecting in that nobody, save for the audience, sees Lurch and Granny lowering a cauldron of steaming liquid onto the carolers. Welcome to The Addams Family, 1991.

It's the battlefield where the outside world meets the Addams' and challenges them to a contest of survival. With this hilarious film, director Barry Sonnenfeld has made a dark comedy that should be the benchmark for future movies in this genre.

The plot of The Addams Family is simple. Gomez Addams' long-term insurance agent, Tully (played by Dan Hedaya) is after the Addams' fortune. He's in debt to Margaret, whose idiot son is the key to the money that will rid Tully of his debt and leave the Addams Family with nowhere to go. Nobody has ever found the secret location of Gomez' vault but the answer to Tully's woes lays with Uncle Fester (Played by Christopher Lloyd). Fester's identity is eventually questioned by his family and is part of a plot that extends from within the context of the film and becomes the plot of this entire movie. This is the only weak point in terms of cinematic and thematic continuity. Fester doesn't quite fool the whole family as Wednesday suspects his false identity when she sees him refuse a dish of entrails at his homecoming dinner.

Relishing in the return of his long lost brother Fester, Gomez delights in alternating between reminiscing with him to questioning his true identity.

The inner workings of the family isn't all that different from what you might see on a rerun, but don't forget that the old television cast had practice. The movie cast is new at this sort of thing. They should be credited with a fine job of making it work.

When we see that the Addams family has a real life problem making ends meet, the movie begins to lose some of its credibility. The Addams' are just too weird to have anything in common with normal people. But despite some of these thin-skinned excuses, you can't help but to love this movie. Sonnenfeld made sure that no one scene lingered for long, firing Naked Gun style one-liners at the viewer in speedy succession. There are enough laughs in The Addams Family to fill three full length movie scores but they work here and don't tire the viewer.

Wednesday Addams (Christina Ricci) acquaints Pugsley (Jimmy Workman) with the family electric chair in Paramount Pictures The Addams Family

The hero of this Addams Family is Wednesday (played by Christina Ricci). She represents the modern woman - with a twist. More than any of the other characters, she steals the show with her borderline sadistic, yet somehow lovable mischief. Replying to a girl scout's questioning if real lemons were the ingredients of Wednesday and Pugsley's lemonade from their streetside stand, she asks, "Are your girl scout cookies made of real girl scouts?" Short of Anjelica Huston, who else could have got away with that one?

No matter how seriously you take The Addams Family, you'll be hard pressed not to laugh. There's nothing here but good old fashioned morbid humor that, when combined with the acting talent possessed by this cast, delivers an exceptionally strong and hilarious movie. Don't miss it!

29th Street: Pleasant, Not Potent

by Jason Alexander

The problem with emulating a classic film is no matter how good, the new will always suffer in comparison to the original. Such is the case with George Gallo's 29th Street, in which the similarities to the timeless "It's a Wonderful Life" detract from an otherwise pleasant and entertaining film.

29th Street begins with Frank Pesce (Anthony LaPaglia) winning the first ever New York State lottery on Christmas Eve, 1976. However, the $6.2 million doesn't fill him with good cheer. Instead, Pesce is picked up by the police for throwing snowballs at a church, setting the tone, as he recounts his story of "cursed good luck" to the police.

The film centers on Pesce's relationship with his father, Frank Sr., played by Danny Aiello. Frank Sr.'s life has relied on gambling to improve the lot of his family. Failing that, he has barely managed to provide on hard work alone. By contrast, his son has had good fortune with jobs, cars, and even a "lucky" stabbing, with none of the effort or heartache of Pesce Sr.

Frank Jr.'s luck enables him to dream and muddle his way through life without disaster. This contrasts with his father's struggles with a harsher reality which have left him standing guard over his postage stamp lawn in Queens, proclaiming "This is it, this is all there is."

The acting is natural, almost to the point of improvisation. Aiello and LaPaglia have a good chemistry together, particularly in argument. However, they are not as compelling alone. Aiello's Frank Sr., though an absorbing supporting performance, never reaches the level of immediacy required to draw the audiences' sympathy.

Frank Pesce, Sr. (Danny Aiello) and Frank Pesce (Anthony LaPaglia) in "29th Street"

For much of the movie, Frank Jr.'s emotional range is simple, limited and well portrayed by LaPaglia. But although LaPaglia is convincing as Frank Jr., his intensity is too brief at the climax to be memorable and too sudden to be credible.

The director has taken pains to recreate Italian-American society, life, and struggles as a backdrop for the father-son conflict. However, by including omnipotent mob figures, an indomitable mother (Laurie Kazan), and endless supply of pasta, arguments over everything(including the weather), and all of the shouting in between, it must be said that Gallo errs on the side of stereotype.

But the greatest detraction to the film is its striking visual similarity to Capra's classic. The blanket of snow, the compassionate police, the joyful family gathering at the end, and the Christmas Eve setting are so reminiscent of It's A Wonderful Life that it lessens the effect of this film. LaPaglia even echoes Jimmy Stewart's final haggard and teary-eyed appearance look to such an extent, that one half expects the bell on the Christmas tree to ring symbolically.

29th Street is a decently acted, feel-good movie that provides low key pleasant entertainment but doesn't, however, leave us with a lasting impression. As countless television stations will show us over the next few weeks, the ability to touch and pull the heart is better left to Clarence Oddbody, Mr. Potter, and George Bailey.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

The Fisherking
"A slice of magic"

Other People's Money
"Wall Street's Beauty and the Beast"
From the cast alone, one would expect Other People's Money to be worth today's exorbitant movie prices. The film stars Danny DeVito, Penelope Ann Miller and Gregory Peck in a three-way feud over the future of a small company, owned by kind-hearted Andrew Jorgenson (played by Peck). Unfortunately, not even these big names can vitalize the corny script that tries, and fails, to deal with such lofty issues as American values, the evils of capitalism and the greed of Wall Street. If its other people's money that will get you in to see this film, than check it out. If not, try something else.

Slacker
"A Pointless and Isolated Vision"
It's hard to imagine that Richard Linklater is a director and not the subject of a psychiatric research study. Slacker is one man's perception of his generation, - one that lingers on street corners, complaining, wandering, theorizing and barely breathing. Linklater, who is himself in his twenties, presents apathy as an acceptable way to cope. Filmed around the University of Texas in Austin, Slacker captures a spiritual void. We follow undeveloped scenarios into more undeveloped scenarios until the credits roll and you leave, wondering where Linklater got the energy to make a movie.

Cape Fear
"True Force"
Surely, the long-time marriage between Robert Dinero's acting and Martin Scorsese's directing has reached its ultimate perfection. Incredible film work coupled with bold scores of music create the dramatic depiction of a psychopath's rage. Dinero's crazed character returns home from prison determined to torment his one-time trial lawyer played by Nick Nolte. The lawyer and his increasingly frustrated family illustrate an anxiety that parallels the intense escalation of this startling story. The movies' horrific mood was enough to make one person in the audience actually get up and run from the theater. You will be blown away at this must-see film.

Year of The Gun
"Good Vintage - Bad Aftertaste"
Though not an entirely off-the-mark film, this story of the 1978 brigatisti kidnapping of Italian President Aldo Moro is a riveting thriller starring Andrew McCarthy, Valeria Golina and Sharon Stone. Set in Rome, David Raybourne (McCarthy) is an expatriot journalist whose first novel falls into the wrong hands. His accidental involvement in a plot to kill the president results in murder, betrayal and the loss of his disloyal girlfriend Lia (Valeria Golina). After an initial lull, the film explodes with action and a fresh look at a sociopolitical climate of which most Americans are unaware. Directed by John Frankenheimer.

Kevin Costner stars as District Attorney, Jim Garrison in Oliver Stone's JFK

The Improper Bostonian's Holiday Movie Suggestions

JFK, starring Kevin Costner, Sissy Spacek and Gary Oldman. Directed by Oliver Stone. Kevin Costner is District Attorney Jim Garrison, the only person to bring a criminal investigation to trial in this suspense drama about the murder of JFK and the mystery that still surrounds it. The film takes a fresh look at all credible assassination theories and is sure to be the subject of many conversations. Warner Brothers. December 20.

Prince of Tides, starring Barbra Streisand and Nick Nolte. Directed by Barbra Streisand. The best-selling book of love, forgiveness and the complexity of family relationships is soon to be a major motion picture that promises to be a success. After leaving a rotting marriage behind him, Tom Wingo (Nick Nolte) goes to New York to aid his sister's troubled psychiatrist, Susan Lowenstein, (Barbra Streisand) as she tries to reconstruct the Wingo family's troubled history. Columbia Pictures. December 25.

THE ANGRY TUXEDOES
Well-Dressed and Well-Versed

by Tobin Streett

Do The Angry Tuxedoes sound like something you should shy away from? Well, don't! They're an improv comedy group and they're house-trained, although seeing them live at The Comedy Connection last Wednesday night gave me some doubts. The Tuxedoes kept a packed house of comedy freaks laughing for close to two hours as they educated the audience on topics from "How to deal with a terrorist in McDonalds" to "Men in labor". But the crowd's education was on the darker side of these subjects - a side of which we don't often think. This group of four comedians will crack you up with an intrepid brand of humor that shocks, surprises and elicits gut-wrenching laughter. They also read the daily papers so it's hard to stump them (even a well-read comedy addict won't be able to turn on the brakes when it's time to feed material to the Tuxedoes).

If anything stands out with The Angry Tuxedoes, it's their professionalism. The Tuxedoes won't disappoint you. If you've ever seen an improv group attempt to stray in too many directions, losing their tempo and the audience in the wake - don't worry. They know their limits and have a good feel for the audience.

Before the show, the Tuxedoes handed out 3 by 5 cards to the audience for scenario suggestions. Led by Carol Feldman, their appointed leader, the Tuxedoes then warmed up with audience-fed National Enquirer headlines like, "Liz is virgin" and "Elvis is King Tut." Seconds later, one of the troupe members, Andrew Meyer, played a great "Elvis Tut" waking from the dead in front of a rather startled onlooker.

Escaping the usual trappings of traditional improv, the Tuxedoes interviewed an audience member with occasional "freeze frames" where they would act out skits based on those chosen excerpts. It's difficult to point to a technique used in choosing the guinea pig but obviously, the more sinful the background, the more interesting the skit.

The meat of the show came from a central story of a toaster salesman and his helper. It was stylistically altered via the likes of Neil Simon, Film Noire and Shakespeare. Feldman and crew petitioned the audience (who, by the way, was itching for a few laughs) for even more thematic obscurities as they played out a final improv skit called "Die". A Tuxedo who stumbled during a firing line style of storytelling would have to act out his or her own death.

The Angry Tuxedoes gave a performance of depth and comedic brilliance, never losing touch with their audience but never playing it safe. For an experienced improv comedian, it's easy to select from audience suggestions and discreetly discard any unfamiliar material in favor of more mainstream subjects. But The Angry Tuxedoes are hungry for a challenge and could go places if they decide to take their talents one step further.

Is EMF Still Alive?

EMF Performs at Citii this past summer

Rachel Power

Fruit Bat and Jim Bob of Carter USM

by Rey Roldan

Now that the hype has died down and "Unbelievable" has been dropped from heavy rotation, the question remains. Will EMF survive? It's quite obvious that EMF, whether it stands for Epsom Mad Funkers or Ecstacy Mother Fuckers, are not a flash in the pan. Eight months after "Unbelievable" was first played on alternative radio stations, they still remain a driving force in pop music. The new single "Lies" is pushing up the charts and the band is returning next week for their third mind-blowing live extravaganza. Accompanying them again is their evil twin, Carter the Unstoppable Sex Machine. With the exception of "Lies," EMF sing nice songs about faith, teenage rebellion and the pursuit of love. Carter, on the other hand, sing about social deterioration, suicide and the negative aspects of English life. The two bands complement each other perfectly like the Yin and the Yang or Laurel and Hardy. Live, they bring together all aspects of the pop music realm - rap, dance, rock, hardcore and heavy metal - in a show that is sweaty, exciting and exhausting.

EMF were once hailed as the New Kids on the Alternative Block and were, subsequently, on the cover of almost every English tabloid, teen mag and newspaper. Their mugs became almost as popular as their record-breaking single and album. Thus, in response to a lot of the media hoopla, they radically changed their freshly-scrubbed altar boy image and became unshaven, corn-braided demons. "That New Kids on the Block thing is just a joke for journalists who sit on their thumbs a lot," said keyboardist Derry Brownson. "Since the last tour of America [this past summer], we've changed a hell of a lot. The way we look now is very different. . . very, very, very different." That doesn't mean that they purposefully made themselves ugly so their mugs wouldn't grace any US mags, however. "You gotta keep on changing. We did it because we now have the money to mess around with our personalities a bit - to mess with our hair, our bodies. You know, to tattoo our bodies. We're all quite amused at what we looked like then. Now, it's the new EMF."

Carter, like the EMF opposites that they are, haven't changed a bit. Jim Bob and Fruit Bat have stuck close to what they have always been - a pop band without a cute image who sing about societal ills. Lacking the posterboy qualities of Derry and the boys, Fruit Bat (so named because of his large ears that stick out like, well, a fruit bat) and Jim Bob (real name: Jim Morrison) rely only on the music to carry their success. Unglamorous but highly charismatic (homely sex symbols like the Commitments' Andrew Strong), they make up in hooks what they lack in looks.

Their shows in England have been so packed that "people were climbing all over each other. A lot of people got hurt," said Fruit Bat. Carter shows in the US have caused similar stirs. Their last show at Citi left many with injuries caused by fans slamming and stagediving. But that doesn't deter Fruit Bat. "[This tour] is going to be bigger and better, I suppose. Bigger venues, more lights, bigger stages. We're gonna be huge."

While EMF's brand of pop music falls closer to Jesus Jones and the Soupdragons in terms of their meticulously produced, hiphop guitar rock, Carter's finds itself more akin to a thrashier, louder post punk sound. This tour, their last before both bands dip back into the studios for eagerly awaited follow-ups, will leave lasting impressions to those who are being exposed to them for the first time and will leave their huge group of devotees some time to relax and recuperate for the next album.

In this quicksilver world of mercurial rises and falls, it seems as if both bands will be around for a long time. With EMF's Shubert Dip (EMI) recently certified platinum, their home video Smoke the Banger just released and their new single "Lies" following the footsteps of "Unbelievable," these five lads from the Forest of Dean are going to be around for a long time. It's going to be hard for Carter USM not to do the same. With 101 Damnations and 30 Something (both on Chrysalis) released within six months of each other, Fruit Bat and Jim Bob have plenty of new material to unleash to the radio and clubs. With a debut like this, both bands have a blinding future ahead of them. Unbelievable and unstoppable, indeed.

There's Something About Paleface...
I Just Don't Understand

by Rey Roldan

I love McDonald's. I mean, where else can you walk in off the street and use the bathroom." Sounding a lot like the neo-poet Jim Carroll, Polydor recording artist Paleface covered his earthiness with a thick layer of surrealism. Performing to an invite only crowd at Passim's in Harvard Square last Wednesday, this quasi-neo-anti-folkie, armed with an acoustic six string and a harmonica strapped to his neck, played a twisted set of tracks from his self-titled debut, a few unreleased songs and a tune that he completed earlier that afternoon. Paleface ranted, raved and even rapped about everything from turning into a TV zombie to a collage of unrelated phrases that began and ended with "Put down that Styrofoam cheeseburger."

A lot of Paleface's spoken dissertations between his very strange folk songs seemed a bit forced at times, as if he were trying to live up to his off-the-wall persona instead of just acting normal (or para-normal, in his case). But for the most part, he faded into the slacker/beatnik that distinctly defines his music. Paleface sang "Something About a Truck (What Is It?)" with quiet passion, questioning topics such as hate, love, drugs and religion.

Ending with his single "Rock and Roll Made Me Want to Burn and Rob," he switched gears from calm, placid guitar folk to the heavy-metallish, thrash three note refrain "burn and rob/burn and rob." Stepping off the stage, it seemed Paleface never left his strange, corduroy-colored world - a world at which the audience were given a pretty good glimpse..

Live and Kicking

by Rey Roldan

Catching the band Live in concert is like witnessing U2 in its early days. With the same coltish energy and powerful charisma that Bono possessed when U2 began in the early Eighties, these four twenty-year-olds from York, Pennsylvania have the potential for megastardom: youth, looks and a talent for intense songwriting.

Culling a handful of songs from their debut EP Four Songs and their forthcoming LP Mental Jewelry (both on Radioactive) slated for release early next year, their intimate and passionate blend of early Replacements and U2 rock and roll fit right at home at the Paradise. Though there weren't many people to experience this fledgling band on the verge of fame, that didn't deter Live from performing an electrifying set sandwiched between locals Monkey Mind and Ireland's Fatima Mansions (the former being an unfortunate case of sounding like every other garagy Boston band and the latter coming across as a band who are trying to be hardcore but want to appeal to the masses at the same time).

Live proved to be the highlight of the triple bill with vocalist Edward Kowalczyk belting out each song as he moved rhythmically like a youthful Joe Cocker. The band played with intense energy, especially Chad Gracey's aggressive drumming that boomed through the venue like a thunderstorm. "Operation Spirit," their single about spiritual disassociation, was played with such conviction and honesty that it left a question of faith in everyone who "heard a lot of talk about this Jesus/ A man of love, a man of strength/ But what a man was two thousand years ago/ Means nothing at all to me today." "Negation" brought in some Middle Eastern mysticism as Kowalczyk writhed and snaked through the lyrics "please don't tell me what love is/ Let's look together/ And find out what love is not." The final song "10,000 Years (Peace Is Now)" is Live's anthem (much like U2's "40"). The band wrung their hearts out, causing Chad Taylor to break a few strings and bassist Patrick Dahlheimer to stumble around in blissed-out passion proving once again that as U2's glory flickers out like a dying ember, it has become Live's duty to carry on that unforgettable fire. It seems they carry that torch pretty well.

MUSIC

CHICKEN RHYTHMS
(Geffen)

Forget Manchester. Forget Athens. It appears that the new scene seems to be coming Northside. This smashing debut from these young lads has enough fresh grooves and irresistable hooks that should dominate the scene for a while. The cause of this catchiness is producer Ian Broudie (Lightning Seeds, Echo and the Bunnymen, Frazier Chorus) who's infamous for making otherwise bland and boring music poppy and danceable. Starting off with the funky single "Take 5," these hiphop / psychedelic / alternative rock dance masters sing ironically about taking it easy while their music keeps your adrenaline pumping to a head-bobbing, foot-tapping drum beat. Sounding as if Jesus Jones had EMF for lunch and burped up a dizzy Happy Mondays, Northside keep the beats up front while making sure the guitars don't get lost in the mix. Lyrically, the band won't win any philosophy awards but who needs profound meanings anyway? "Yeah Man" is an instrumental elegy to Manchester's dying days, filled with the hiphop drumming that made Stone Roses so popular and the wahwah guitar upon which Happy Mondays were weaned. Fading off like a distant storm, it ushers in a new age for progressive pop where the psychedelia is authentic, not fabricated. Long live the beats of barnyard animals.-R. Roldan

Let's Get Small

by Tobin Streett

It's hard to find a good watering hole today. One at which you can sit and nurture a beer while taking a break from the rigors of life. While most bars now seem to be parts of chains or "theme" bars, there are a few remaining to be savored. You have to dig, but if you search long enough, you can still find some that offer the same thing they offered twenty years ago. Atmosphere.

Hence, The Littlest Bar.

Have you ever seen those Japanese subway workers whose job is to push, shove and cram rush-hour business people into the subway cars? They could have a future at The Littlest Bar on Province Street. Located around the corner from The Parker House Hotel, The Littlest Bar looks like someone's last minute thought for a joke. This tiny bar sits below a parking lot and next to the steps to the old British Governor's garden. But if you want to drink real beer in a real atmosphere around real Bostonians, then this diminutive joint is the spot.

Most bars usually provide more than two tables for their customers. And most have room for over forty people. But the story is different at The Littlest Bar where the capacity is 37. This is the kind of bar where it wouldn't be a surprise to hear, "I'd like to buy a round for everyone." If you're lucky, it wouldn't cost more than thirty bucks. You might wonder who would ever want to buy a bar that only holds 37 people. Owner Patrick Grace has run the joint for over six months and says, "I wanted to buy it because there is a lot of traffic in this area and a lot of Scottish and British tourists seem to stop by in the daytime." But they're not the only types to wander in. The twenty-year old bar's regulars include state representatives, state employees, local business people and some more noted local names. But even though it has a regular daytime crowd, The Littlest Bar's evening hours attract a different element. Grace says, "Late nights we get students from B.U. and B.C. in addition to our regulars." The only problem with the students says Patrick, "is they travel in numbers." But he doesn't see too many large student groups because, as he points out, "If you have a group of ten people and we're busy - only half can get in." For those reasons, "It's unusual to get a line out front although it happens at times", says Patrick.

But once you come in this place, you'll understand why college partiers would want to come here. For them, it's downtown, tucked away from the busier areas that attract college students . . . and it's small. But more than anything else, this place lacks the pretentious crowds you'll find at other Boston establishments. People go here to drink, talk and relax. In that order. Not to bullshit or impress strangers with their earning power or where they work. It's not a pick-up bar. And it's not an expensively furnished martini lounge. It doesn't even have a kitchen or a table that seats six but it does offer one thing that you can't find at many bars in town. The Littlest Bar has style!

If that doesn't give you an idea, maybe this will paint a better picture: There are dark-wood walls decorated with sports photographs that surround the bar and the two tables inside. The tables each seat four while the bar seats nine. There's no room for a walk-in storage area in the 18-square-foot establishment so the beer is kept on a shelf under the front window. I counted twelve cases laid across the shelf in piles of two which made me wonder: if Patrick had stacked the cases in piles of four, he could have provided room for three more people or increased his capacity by 12.3 %. Now that's small!

But despite its size, The Littlest Bar is a must see for those of you who want to drink a beer in one of Boston's improper bars. So stop by, have a beer, a sandwich or a hot dog and if you're there at the right time, you may even hear a local musician play an impromptu show.

A "Small" show.

•33 DUNSTER STREET 354-0636, 33 Dunster St., Camb.. A restaurant/bar catering primarily to grad students and locals. A good place to procrastinate and chitchat with friends or to catch a bite on your way out to tackle the day's tasks. Open for late night dining. No cover. Casual atmosphere and dress. Drop in Sun. for the Jazz brunch..

•ALLEY CAT LOUNGE 451-6200, 1 Boylston Pl., Boston. Situated in the basement of the tropical dance club Zanzibar, this newcomer to the Boston bar scene is fast becoming a hit. The decor is brick with various Disney prints and the works of local artist Daniel Hejinian adorning the walls. The crowd is a mix of urban young professionals. Expect a short line, but its worth the wait..

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers. .

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos.. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, a placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies but is fairly steep. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night..

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos.. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. The crowd consists primarily of young professionals. The dress tends to be glitzy. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights..

•AVEROF 354-4500, 1924 Mass. Ave., Camb.. If you have a fetish for hommus or navels, this is the place for you. Located at Porter Sq., this casual Middle Eastern/Greek restaurant features live ethnic music and belly dancing nightly. The crowd is composed primarily of regulars, but everyone is welcome. No cover (except on special occasions) and no dress code..

The Juggler and The Fool (25 Across) are two of the cards in a TAROT deck. KASHA (110 Across) is made from buckwheat. The 1984 "Weird Al" Yankovic tune "EAT IT" (120 Across) parodied Michael Jackson's "Beat It." "I SING the Body Electric" (40 Down) is a Walt Whitman poem. HUA Guofeng (101 Down) was premier of China from 1976 to 1980.

Gart, You wonder why your party only lasted an hour? Try wearing some Right Guard my friend. Your odor would have knocked a buzzard off of a sh*t wagon.
Anonymous

BRTLay off the shiny red capsules-they'll turn you into a crazed, grinning, homicidal maniac. Then again you always were. Never mind.-Double

I live in the corner unit. You live above me. I have two babies. You have an electric guitar. I'm on parole for VOLUNTARY manslaughter. Any questions?

Andy, When they photographed you in the Hot Tub, how did they airbrush your gut out of the picture?
Your pal, Jeff in Southington

Bones, How did they manage to fit your whole head in the camera lens?

Mr. Cooke Fellow
Ve know vhere you liff. You haff disturbed our plans too many times. Ve haff an assortment of power tools. You veel look nice on our mantel.
Your Pals O&H

Karen, I know you forgot. I know it was an accident and I know that you'll never do it again. Now be a good sport and apologize to my dog.

Heather, If you ever try to put your foul fish lips on mine again, I'll vomit down your gullet.

Laura, You are a great inspiration for anyone you meet who doesn't own an answering machine to go out and buy one. You've put meaning in the phrase "Screening My Calls."

Dear Jeff, The ring appraisal I had done last week on my beautiful ring came in the mail today on my way to meet Daddy at his office. I bet he never gave Mother anything as fancy as Zirconia. Dinner is in the refrigerator. See you at 8pm.
Love, Muffin

Scott, Please come home. Everyone misses you! P.S. Dad's is looking for a new Bouncer.
-The Girls From Blue Cross Collections

Eli J, So who was it last night, slam pig?

Christian C, Someone told me that BC didn't let in slouches. They really picked a winner in you, huh?

Mike M, Saw some nude photographs of you recently. By the way, did they give you $500.00 to put your clothes back on at that strip-show in Providence? Have fun cleaning toilets at Sporters.

Patty L, Are sideburns all I need for a poke? Or do I have to look like Alec Baldwin? Or is it Kirk Cameron? Or is it Leif Garrett? Or is it any of those other pre-pubescent boneheads?

Thom, I don't think the committee will find much humor in your latest contribution, you sick degenerate pig!

Yo Doge! You never call us anymore you lazy carcass. When you get out of that rotting hole of a town, we'll dig your right eyeball out with a spoon. A very blunt spoon. Then we'll have Glitch use it for target practice.
-CP Brookline

Bill D., Hear you're still going to Napoleons Saturday nights. Hope everything is miserable for you, you pizza-faced little #!&*.

Julien D.-You Psychopathic Nazi Bastard. If we ever find you, we'll tie you down and have Peter serenade you with cartoon theme songs until your fat ugly head explodes like a ripe watermelon.
-The BSS

Did you see the size those that Rat at *&%$'s restaurant?

Sterling N.,You haunt our dreams, mess up our lives, force us to go on your idiotic assignments and nearly get us killed. We're sick of it and we won't take it any more. We quit. Besides we're sick of eating nothing but blueberry pancakes for days on end.
- The Froot Loop Troop

Gug, You will kindly withdraw all your money from the bank, put it in a large envelope and drop it off at 3am, next Wednesday in front of Chumley's. It's been a pleasure doing business with you
Fnord

To the gyrating keyboard player of Urban Oasis, The best band I've ever seen in Boston, I will put those hips to the test they deserve! P.S. I'll bring the tambourine. I'll be watching you.

W.G. Shea — as much as we hate to admit it, America does, in fact, have a class system. Rest assured that you are at the lower end of that class system!! Where my sister has dumped you, I'll miss your lovely wardrobe and hair-style!

Mr. Stub with Five Points. What goes around comes around.

Dear Emily, The love of my life, drop dead, it's off, I saw you with the plumber yesterday morning.

Picc, For the last time, I don't want to buy any of those goddamn books. Mrs. Jones.

Tony, you slut, don't you know that we don't do things the same here in Boston. One at a time.

Charles, when you invited me to be on your big mattress, I thought you meant the show.

Mareeeeeeelizabeth, you have beautiful strawberry blonde hair. The Plumber.

Hey Tammy from New Yawk, I must confess, it was a true pleasure fooling you the other night. I don't play for the Red Sox and don't even like baseball. But if that's what it takes to get some respect and then some, I'm all game, just like you were.

Roses are red, violets are blue, I have the clap and so do you.

No Harm Done! Gee Stan. I don't know how to thank you, but I'll try! Thanks for leaving my car on empty, thanks for making the long distance calls on my phone, and thanks so much for leaving your toenail clippings on the dinner table.

I Feel Like Dancing!..Oh sweet Regina. We met at the New England Leo Sayer Fan Club reunion and my heart started beating again. Then I started dancing with you. Now I want to put your feet in visegrips, stick slats of bamboo under your toenails, make myself a turkey club, get out a lighter and watch you sweat.

I Need A Job. Ex-Boston area communications dean STILL needs work. I'm currently teaching but no one comes to my classes. I'm 5'9, 164lbs, with big black circles under my eyes. But that'll soon change. I'm also a plastic surgeon. No I'm not, Yes I am, No I'm not, Yes I am. . .

How's Your Car, Bill? Remember when the engine started, the paint didn't have key marks and the tires weren't slashed? Look out your window. Good Morning!

Jonathan, you tough guy, we didn't know you were such a romantic. "sweety pums, and sugar pies and yum yum love bunny". It's all on tape. And the whole gang was over to listen and comment. I have a funny feeling that you won't command as much respect in the office as you once did.

Dear Improper Bostonian, I can't imagine why any self respecting educated person would derive any pleasure in a section dedicated to dirty laundry.

Jeff B., It's almost time for Superjock 2 - have the vomit stains come off of your turtleneck yet?
Your Hosts

Tripp at Atlantic, It's time to come out of the closet. Quit teasing your boss. See you in L.A.,
Your Honey, Lance.

Peter, If all I wanted was to stare at your sumptuous naked body, all I'd have to do is to go to Life Drawing! Do we know how to use a phone? Hey there is an idea — call! I was pissed but I can still be made happy from the sensuous artist who painted your crotch smack dab in the middle of the canvas at that Art School!

Brian, So you stole SQ from me eh? Skipping town won't help. I'm going to sue you for every cent you've got. See you in court.

Missy, I took it upon myself to prevent some cruelty to animals and had spot leave his mark on your new mink.

Tony, Helena AND Marci say hi. Guess what, we're sisters, you slut!

Sergei, Cliff, Ralph, Trank, and the YBC gang,.We give up already, leave us alone. We're sorry about Brak. We'll even give back what's left of him. Sorry that we misplaced his spleen. Three Circle

Hey Scott, you were quite a card the other night. Do you always pass out at parties. And how do you explain your new makeover. I suppose that you could say that you were attacked at the Filene's makeup counter.

Marianne, say it isn't so, how can you dami un bochino if you're now practicing monagamy?

To the macho guy on the Green Line of the T last week who was grabbing at my behind, and then had the audacity to ask for my phone number. In truth, I'm technically not a woman. Still interested?

Raymond, I came home to an empty bed for the last time last night. Stay the hell out of my life.

Suzy, you little bitch! How could you be so insensitive? To sleep with Jay a week after our wedding. Keep hiding because I'll kill you if I ever find you. Jack.

Anyone interested in forming a Boston chapter of the Elvis Ian club call Mike at 555-2387.

Jules, Hows about we do it my way next time? Those saran wrap burns really impair my use of the word processor. I'm now taking my vacation time early because of you.

Hey Pam, remember me? Mork? Well, I've returned to this planet and am ready to begin some more nanu nanu.

Toby, congratulations, you scored "intelligent third grader" on your grammar check. A few scores higher and you might get a job offer from Little Beans.

Karey, I guess it's safe to say its over now. At least from a distance of several hundred miles away.

Phil, you lost cause, I've invested five of the prime years of my life putting you through law school and you had the audacity to run off with that Legal Assistant 3 weeks after you joined the firm. I hate you now and will never forgive you until the day I die for destroying all my dreams.

Jon, nice mail fraud business you've been conducting in your free time. I was wondering where those bundles kept coming from. To give you a little tip off, you better hide because I'm not the only one who knows.

To all the politically correct broads at the state house, if you had any idea who I am, you'd never believe it was true.

B.J. all roads lead to Europe, don't miss this opportunity!

Camile, It began as love at first sight and ended with the clap after the first date? I've been fooled by your act of innocence, boy do you know how to fool.

Rey, or should I say Andrew, or is it Steven, you've been separated at birth too many times and its getting difficult to tell the difference.

Muscle brain at the Newbury St. gym, try concealing your history a little bit better, to think that I almost consented to live with you.

Hey Adam Z. For the last time, stop calling those damn 900 lines when you're at our house, you're not fooling anybody, everybody knows it was you.

Mike M. You could hardly say that I know you, but when we were in nursery school together you said you'd marry me. Now I find you to be so distasteful, I don't even want you to know who I am.

Susan, the whole office knows what you did with the computer system, return that printer that you "borrowed" and we won't tell a soul.

For the last time you damn noisy neighbors, turn down that tv or I'll burn your house to the ground! You know who I am, I'll give you until Thanksgiving and then poof!

Joe, why don't you try doing something different on the job, like working. Sincerely, your supervisor.

Rodney, you're living proof of the theory that all you really need to know you learned in kindergarten. Now if you could just get your lazy ass off the couch and get a job, maybe, just maybe, you might start acting like a mature adult, or at least an intelligent sixth grader.

Scrooge's Holiday Pointers:

Tight Fisted Tips for Tough Times

IF YOU DON'T CARE ABOUT TIME, CONVENIENCE AND FREE TRIPS AROUND THE WORLD, TAKE THE TRAIN TO WASHINGTON.

The train takes you from New York to Washington in a little under three hours. The Trump Shuttle covers the same ground in about 60 minutes, gate to gate.

Your train ticket is only good on one specific train, so you have to do business according to their schedule. Your Trump Shuttle ticket is good on any one of our flights (there's one every hour, on the hour, from 7AM to 9PM, in either direction), so your schedule is your business.

You need an advance reservation to take the train and still you won't get an assigned seat. No reservations are necessary on The Trump Shuttle. You get an assigned seat, and there's a back-up plane waiting when a flight is full. Guaranteed.

Flying The Trump Shuttle, you can earn a minimum of 1,000 OnePass℠ miles for every flight (more if you are a member of The Trump ShuttleClub℠). OnePass miles are good for free trips around the world on a dozen world-class airlines, as well as hotel stays and car rentals. The train just takes you for a ride. Nothing more.

It's up to you. Take the train and spend more time traveling than doing business. Or take The Trump Shuttle. And keep your business on the right track.

SCROOGE 'S HOLIDAY POINTERS
TIGHT FISTED TIPS FOR TOUGH TIMES

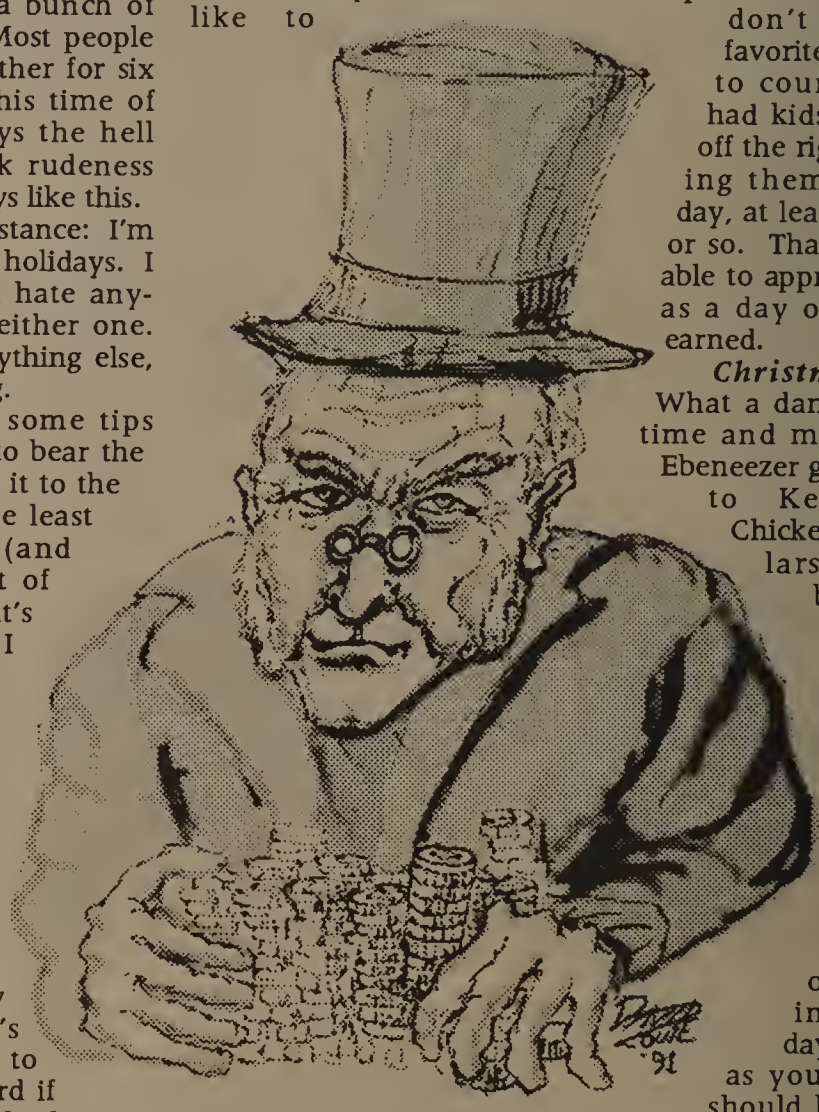
by Tobin Streett

What can I say about the holidays that hasn't already been said? Well, Bah Humbug!

All I hear is "be nice to your neighbors" and "have good cheer" and a bunch of other gibberish. Most people are nice to each other for six or seven weeks this time of year and it annoys the hell out of me. Thank rudeness people aren't always like this.

Take me, for instance: I'm honest. I hate the holidays. I hate people and I hate anything to do with either one. But more than anything else, I hate the shopping.

Do you want some tips from me on how to bear the holidays and make it to the New Year with the least amount of pain (and the most amount of money). Now, that's something that I like. Pain. Other people's pain.



Anyway, here are some of my tips:

Shopping For Presents - Don't Do It. If you want to buy someone a gift, it's always a good idea to think long and hard if this money could be better spent on something else. Like yourself. After all - who knows you better than you? Save yourself the time and the money. Leave the screaming brats to themselves. Unless of course you want to have some good old-fashioned fun by watching them pee on Santa's lap in the mall.

Giving Presents- Only give presents to those who absolutely need them. When was the last time anyone gave you a present and wanted nothing in return?

Throwing a Party-most people throw parties to provide their friends and acquaintances with the opportunity to laugh, drink and socialize. These are all frivolous wastes of time that annoy me. But I can suggest a great way of avoiding this little holiday tragedy. Don't make friends. No friends - no party. It's that easy.

Relatives- Something I don't have to worry about since I'm the oldest living person in my family and I don't have any kids. I hate kids. But for those of you who were dumb enough to have them, here's how you may want to handle them: When they invite you over for a few days or even a night, it would be easiest to decline the invitation with the best excuse that I've heard to date: Tell them that you'd like to spend some time with them but that you'd rather French kiss Moammar Khadafy than be with them. This is usually a good hint for them that you prefer to spend each and every holiday evening alone, counting your money. And if your relatives laugh at your excuse, then it's time to let 'em have it. Tell them how daft they are and that you can't believe you're related to them. Then tell them to go to hell. This excuse worked wonders for me the last time I had to make up an excuse and that was in 1954. Any questions?

Shoveling Snow and Melting Ice on Your Doorstep- Shovel the snow but don't melt the ice. You'll have to be a little more careful but at least you'll know where the slippery parts are hidden. And all of those money grabbing beggars who manage to find their way to your doorstep (and believe me, they do) will find a little surprise when they land on their backsides. My philosophy is that anyone with the nerve to come around to your front door and ask for a donation to one of a million phony scams, deserves a bruise on his or her buttocks. When will people learn that enough's enough?

Working on Christmas Eve- A wonderful idea. I'm surprised that more people don't do it. It's my favorite day of the year to count money. If I had kids, I'd start them off the right way by making them work on this day, at least until 8 o'clock or so. That way, they'll be able to appreciate Christmas as a day off that they've earned.

Christmas Dinner- What a damnable waste of time and money! Let Old Ebeneezer give you a tip- go to Kentucky Fried Chicken, drop two dollars for a leg and breast basket with fresh biscuit. And, for a special holiday treat, order yourself a home style apple wedge for dessert. You'll save money not only in the cost of food, but also in the next few days worth of heat, as your caloric count should be high enough to hibernate until the New Year.

Decorations-What could be more beautiful than money? It's green and goes well with the color of the blood that I drain from my employees each year - red! The colors of Christmas. You can't fool me.

Christmas- Hah! The biggest farce since, well, actually, it's the biggest farce in history. I use Christmas as a measuring tool against other historical farces. I could never understand why so many people rejoice on this day. It's the best day to go into the office and get some work done while it's nice and quiet. I'm surprised that more people don't do what I do.

New Year's Eve-A colossal waste of time and money. Bah! Just another excuse by the weak to drink and forget their troubles. For me, a good night to stay home, make a cup of soup and polish my gold coins.

AROUND TOWN

Compelling melodies and irresistible harmonies are not plentiful items in the music world of today. Then there's The Story whose debut album, "Grace in Gravity" is a bargain for anyone who wants to have their soul soothed and spirit massaged. Playing live on January 9 at Johnny D's in Somerville, The Story will captivate you with an all-original menu of acoustic songs that range from catchy pop to soulful ballads. This is one duo that's hot. See them now before they charge thirty bucks a head at Great Woods.

Soaring into town on December 10 are The Flying Karamazov Brothers, the Emmy Award winning vaudeville group whose wit, musicality and craftsmanship are sure to win over new fans and delight old ones. Helping to inaugurate the Poets' Theatre's first season at the Hasty Pudding, the Brothers K. will perform their astonishing Theatre of The Air show of juggling feats and non-stop humor from now until December 31. Tickets for the show are $18-$28. Discounts for students and children under 14 are available. Call the Hasty Pudding Theater at 496-8400 or TicketPro at 1-800-828-7080 for tickets and show times..

The Bank of Boston Celebrity Series presents a concert by world renowned violinist Itzhak Perlman who will perform January 12, 1992 at Symphony Hall at 3pm. Considered by many music critics as the number one violinist in the world, Perlman captures the human imagination in a way few artists have succeeded in doing. With each new audience, he delights in sharing his insights through the wonderful sound he creates from the violin. Tickets for this incredible performer are available now through the Symphony Hall box office or by calling Symphony Charge at 266-1200.

Campbell's Soup, Andy Warhol 1965

German-born Joseph Beuys' enigmatic and symbolic art has never been so broadly represented in New England as it currently is at the Museum of Fine Arts. "Beuys and Warhol: the artist as shaman and star" runs through March 8, 1992. Subjects like Marilyn Monroe and coke bottles filled with herb tea are just some of the many interesting and strange photographs taken by these two artists. Both artists - cult pop figures in their respective countries - addressed the alienation and materialism of modern life. The last time the Boston community was able to see so many Warhol pieces was in 1966 at the Institute of Contemporary Art. For more information, call the MFA at 267-9300.

One of Boston's favorite holiday traditions, the Festival of Light and Song, celebrates its tenth anniversary this year with a completely re-written show, twice as many performances, and a new location at the Tsai Center at Boston University. The Festival is a celebration featuring music, theater and rituals from around the world. This year's show features spectacular lighting as a big hairy beast is banished into the darkness and all is saved with the help of a magic cone. Traditional A cappella songs from Balkan, British, American and Jewish backgrounds are sung by the acclaimed ensembles Anabel and Wild Rose, Koleda and the Light and Song Chorus.. Shows are Dec. 12-22. Advance tickets are available at the Tsai Performance Center box office (353-TSAI), all TicketPro locations, Bostix, and Out of Town Tickets. For more information, call 232-6760.

RSVP for HBO's On Location, with Rowan Atkinson. The Robin Williams of the United Kingdom, Rowan Atkinson, is performing two live comedy shows at the Huntington Theatre on December 19 and 20. HBO is taping this free-to-the-public event for their On Location series. Mr. Atkinson is best known by television audiences as Mr. Bean and Blackadder. He has won the Golden Rose of Montreux award for Comedy King of Europe in addition to numerous other awards including an international Emmy. Tickets for this rare U.S. show are free but must be reserved by calling the Huntington Theatre box office at 266-7900 x2646. Performances begin at 8:00pm.

Collen Walsh of Watertown and Kenton Smith of Framingham.

by Leslie Semonian

Friday the 13th has traditionally brought a lot of things to mind: black cats, bad luck and even Jason running around Crystal Lake. However, at the Park Plaza Hotel last Friday, 1900 guests in the Imperial Ballroom had one thing on their minds - Snowball '91.

The 5th annual Snowball, at $25 per ticket (completely sold out in advance) raised over $55,000 this year of which $45,000 goes to help support non-federally funded youth programs in the Boston area and provide opportunities for disadvantaged local youths. The remainder of the proceeds help pay for the costs associated with the Snowball.

The fund-raising event, organized by Santa Claus Anonymous Ltd. (a non-profit corporation founded by President Todd Kurland and Vice President Elizabeth Callanan), has increased in attendance by over 700 percent since its debut in 1987. Revenue has experienced almost a 1400 percent surge. Each year the committee members research different youth organizations and decide which groups to support. This year, the proceeds will be donated to The Boston City Lights, a performance and training center dedicated to the success of inner-city children; Bridge over Troubled Waters which supports services for runaway and homeless adolescences and Youth Enrichment Services which provides recreational adventures for inner-city youths.

This year's event filled the ballroom with people ranging in age from 21 to 62. The invitations specified formal dress with black tie optional. Brightly colored festive dresses were occasionally spotted through a sea of black velvet and silk (the favorite color among female partygoers). The men looked equally dashing in their formal attire while the band, Blue Heaven, packed the dance floor with music ranging from rock and roll to swing. A group of youths from The Boston City Lights also performed a 15 minute dance exhibition.

The evening peaked when a week long trip to the Caribbean was raffled off, along with other prizes donated by local businesses.

Todd Kurland attributes the Snowball's continued success to social networking among friends. This is more commonly referred to as the "Snowball Effect", hence the name.

The committee has already started accumulating new ideas for next year. The goal for Snowball '92 is to raise $250,000 with an attendance level of 10,000. The showcase for this colossal event has yet to be determined. Some might be skeptical of this group's lofty expectations, however their growth speaks for itself and they are confident it will be another success. See you there!

If interested in volunteering for Snowball '92 or just to keep posted on next year's event, please call or write:

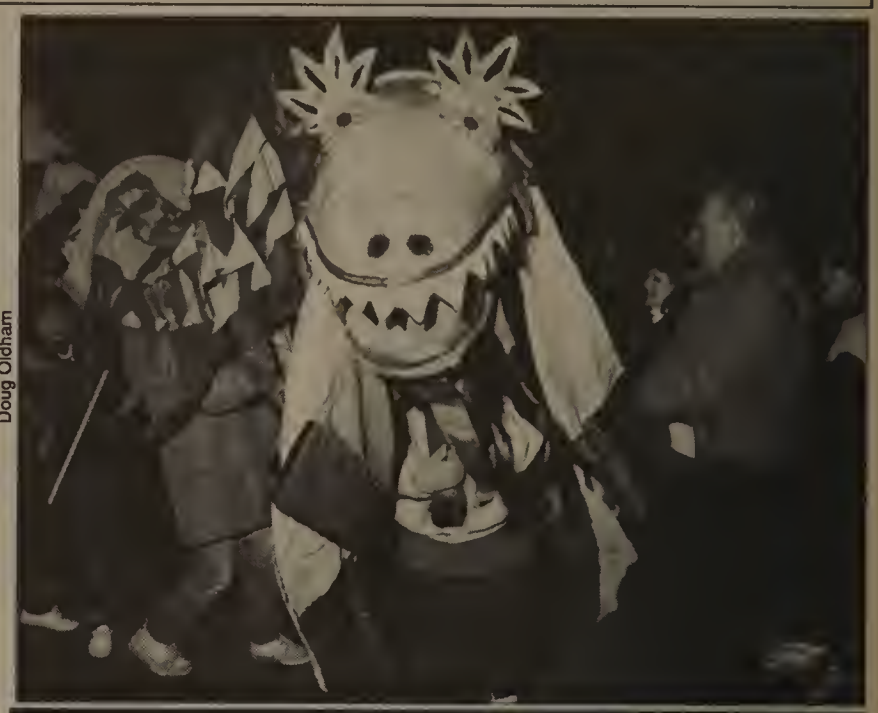
One of Boston's biggest shindigs of the year is on its way. The time is nearing when half of our great city bundles up and takes to the chilly streets to ring out the old and ring in the new, First Night Style!

Bostonians wait all year for the day-long celebration where the whole community comes together, whoops it up, and pays homage to the arts.

There's storytelling, dance, theater, puppetry, opera, folk music, jazz, magic, juggling, and much more. All of Boston becomes an extravagant stage for more than 1,000 artists.

Founded in 1976 by a group of Boston artists, the First Night Alliance now contains over 75 cities as young and old from Boston to Hawaii and Edmonton to Annapolis, brave the cold and celebrate beginnings.



The success and warmth felt from First Night is undoubtedly growing, as evidenced in 1990 when First Night won the Kevin Lynch Award from the School of Architecture and Planning at MIT for its capacity to create a successful community festival involving many kinds of people in an urban environment.

And what a festival it is!

Store fronts metamorphosize into theaters for dancers, ice sculptures illuminate the dark and City Hall gets a temporary facelift via projections, lights, and color. All artistic mediums are used: early, classical and new music, folk and ethnic music and dance, ballet and modern dance, theater, mime, vaudeville, puppetry, storytelling, poetry, film, video and environmental installations.

Over 150 performances and exhibits ranging from classics to cultural traditions, as well as specifically commissioned works for First Night, will be on display to help ring in the New Year.

"I think the reason this is so successful in Boston is because people see the sense of community and revitalization of downtown and the hundreds of artists being showcased," said First Night President and Artistic Director Zeren Earls. "A lot of communities see this as really positive for the urban environment. People have rediscovered what the urban environment is about. Day to day, there isn't much of the public coming together. This is a success story."

This year will mark a special anniversary for First Night and the rest of the country. The New Year will focus on the anniversary of Christopher Columbus' arrival to the New World, so First Night's program will also celebrate the many cultures of this country. A Native American theme will also prevail throughout the festivities, as the Wampanoags of Massachusetts and many other tribes will lead this year's Grand Procession down Boylston Street.

Earls said that in addition to the Native American theme, First Night has chosen to celebrate America as a destination for cultures from all across the globe.

First Night celebrants will take in everything from Caribbean music to Cambodian games; from African celebrations to Japanese bugaku dancing. You could take an international tour in one night!

Other shows related to the anniversary will be "The Telling Circle: Boats Coming Together," an environmental installation of boats on City Hall Plaza symbolizing the arrival of diverse cultures to America and "One Land: The Spirit Alive," a dance program at the Wang Center.

First Night also offers the chance to reflect on and honor the Native Americans.

"We had to contact the tribal leaders and discuss with them their participation," Earls said. "They're very pleased to participate. We don't always honor someone every year, but this year, one of the most important aspects is the anniversary of 1492. We thought it was significant."

First Night starts to brew as early as December 29. The public will delight in preview appearances by costumed artists showing off their elaborate, Mardi Gras-styled costumes in the Back Bay and downtown during the First Night "Street Surprises." During the day, Boston is gradually transforming into a showcase of spleandor. Ice sculptures of flying horses, sea serpents and giants are taking form, and dancers take the place of merchandise in storefront windows.

On December 31, the gala event is fully underway. It starts with the Children's Festival from 1-5pm, where children and families will relish in entertainment such as dance, theater, puppets, and other events that are presented at some of the 43 indoor sites for the celebration.

Unlike other traditional New Year's Eve celebrations, drinking is not emphasized. There are no alcoholic drinks sold on the streets or in any of the events as strangers mingle and enjoy the festivities with sound mind and body.

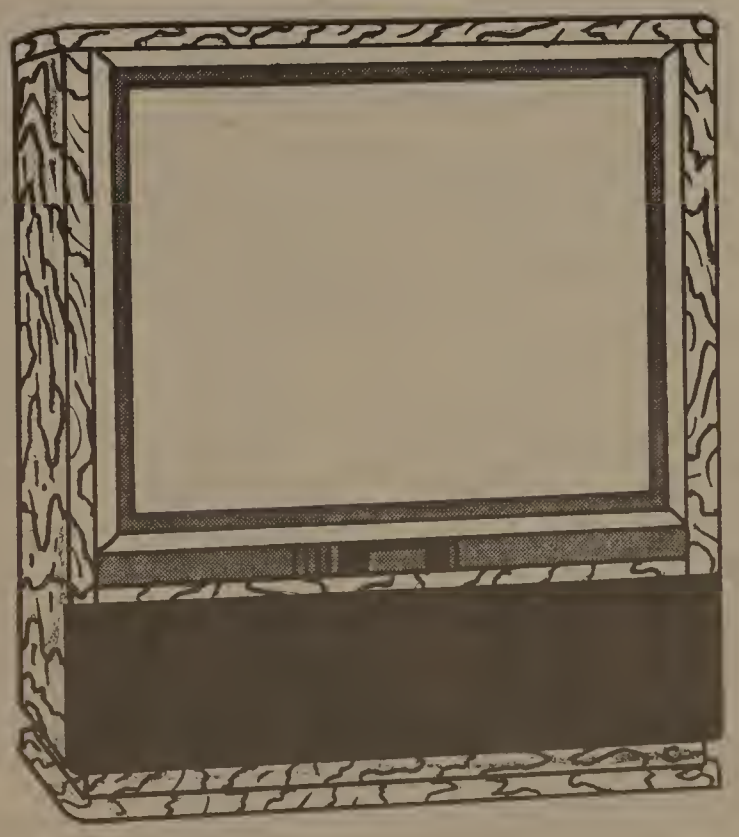
There are 43 indoor and 23 outdoor sites planned for First Night 1992. This year, the Hynes Convention Center is the largest indoor site for a First Night performance, with a capacity of 17,820 people at any one time.

First Night Buttons are sold to support the festival and provide admission to most of the indoor events on a first-come, first-seated basis. Buttons are $6 if bought from Dec. 1-25 and $10 between Dec. 26-31. First Night Buttons are available at more than 350 locations, including Au Bon Pain French Bakery Cafes, Blockbuster Videos, participating Christy's Markets, D'Angelo Sandwich Shops, participating Fleet Banks and Star Markets.

Each year, First Night features one special ticketed performance, providing guaranteed, unreserved seating. This year, The Cantata Singers and Ensemble will perform Mozart's "Coronation Mass," conducted by David Hoose at Tremont Temple Baptist Church, Converse Hall. Tickets are $12 and can be purchased at Bostix at Faneuil Hall, Out-of -Town News and Ticket Agency and Ticketmaster Charge-by-Phone. Performances are at 8 and 9:30pm.

But First Night Festivities are far from over. At 5:30pm, watch Boylston Street magically transform into a colorful street theater as artists and pedestrians parade for one hour from Hynes Convention Center to the Boston Common. Multicolored costumes, banners, gigantic inflatables and silver moons, unicyclists, and stiltwalkers all hand out bells and ornaments to spectators and encourage them to join in.

At 11pm, the countdown to midnight begins on the clocks of the Custom House Tower. At midnight, fireworks over Boston Harbor, synchronized to music, mark the New Year. Participants of First Night wishing to make a New Year's resolution and want to increase the odds of it actually happening attach their wishes in writing to a specially commissioned totemic sculpture by artist Mark Cooper.



And believe it or not, work begins bright and early on January 2 for the next First Night celebration.

Earls said applications for the participating artists are sent out as early as March and are reviewed until July. Sites have to be chosen, funds have to be raised, and art installations have to be prepared. First Night is a year-round project, but Earls said it is well worth the effort.

"The artists become a catalyst for a community celebration," Earls said. "The difference of First Night is really providing a unique experience that people, in their daily lives, don't really encounter. It's a magic transformation of the city."

THE ORIGINAL SPORTS SALOON

by Meg Worden & K.B. Williams

Calling all sports fans: have you ever wanted to meet Ted Williams or Bobby Orr? Well, we can't quite arrange a meeting, but if you go to The Original Sports Saloon (popularly known as The Sports Saloon), you'll certainly be impressed by the two life-size models of these sportsmen. Literally bursting out of the walls, they're brandishing, respectively, a baseball bat and a hockey stick - almost daring you to enter this world of sports. Of course, this is just the beginning of the sports theme. Just about every square inch of the walls is given over to framed photos of local players and teams, either posing or in action -we even spotted a photo of Raymond Flynn in his basketball days! It comes as something of a surprise to realize that the Sports Saloon, which was established way back in 1904, is actually located in the Copley Square Hotel (Boston's oldest hotel).

Perhaps it was the atmosphere that did it. The Sports Saloon is like a friendly neighborhood bar where regulars come every day. It's the kind of place that attracts people of all ages and occupations. Around 5:00 pm it's more than likely that you'll find long established regulars like Joe and Sebastian, and later on, a more youthful crowd. Some customers come just to visit the bar, but others arrive specifically for a meal, which can be eaten either at the bar or in the dining area.

Seated in a large alcove under a neon basketball hoop, we read that the sports theme is continued in the menu, with many dishes named for sports heroes. We began with a shared order of potato skins; these come as "The Natural", for $3.95, and "The Supernatural" for $5.95. We chose the second of these, and we just loved them. The skins themselves were perfect and cooked just right; the topping was loaded with cheese and had that lovely mature cheddar taste, while the selection of additional toppings served on the side (guacamole, chopped tomatoes and onions, salsa and chived sour cream) proved irresistible.

Moving on to the main course, we noted that there are both sandwiches and cooked dishes. Hamburgers are offered in both 4 oz ($3.50) and 8oz ($4.75) sizes. Two house hamburgers are also on the menu, and we can personally vouch for the "Louis Tiant", topped with cheddar cheese, guacamole, red onion and salsa, for $6.75. Of the seven hearty sandwiches offered from $4.95 - $8.95, the "Larry Bird" ($5.95) is one of the most popular (grilled boneless chicken breast, marinated in rosemary and garlic, served on a whole wheat bun with mustard, melted Swiss cheese and bacon). We were tempted, but settled instead on Auerbach and Sinden, and one of the daily specials. The Auerbach and Sinden ($9.25) teams up a half portion of southern style barbecued baby back ribs with a grilled boneless breast of chicken. (Both the ribs and the chicken can also be ordered separately). The ribs were lean, succulent, subtly spicy and oh so good. Was there a touch of molasses in the sauce? Whatever it was, it was addictive. Real hearty stick-to-the-ribs fare. The chicken, too, was excellent and cooked to moist perfection. It had been prepared with the same barbecue sauce, but its different texture gave it its own unique character. The dish came with a portion of delicious french fries that had obviously been freshly prepared; they were nicely seasoned and were cooked just right. We were so excited about the ribs, however, that we didn't even notice that our server forgot to bring the Boston baked beans that should have accompanied this dish.

The daily special we selected was London broil ($9.95), and this was the one disappointment of the evening. We had no quarrel with the six tender slices of nicely prepared meat, but was it really necessary to assault this unoffending dish with thick, unpleasant gravy? The meat tasted better once the gravy was removed, but it would have been perfect if served with nothing but the natural juices. The accompanying fries were delicious, while the salad was of the predictable variety, comprising mostly iceberg lettuce, with a quite nice herbed dressing.

Other entrees range in price from $6.95 to $12.95 and include broiled steak, grilled chicken, baked scrod and grilled shrimp. Those wonderful ribs are specially featured on Wednesday nights, when you can order all you can eat for $8.95 - talk about a bargain! On other nights, a half portion is $6.95, and a full portion costs $9.95.

In our sticky, sated and euphoric state, we were in no condition to try dessert, but for those of you who save room, prices range from $1.95 for frozen low fat yogurt to $3.50 for Boston-style cheese cake with strawberries.

Other bargains and special features include a "Fast Break Lunch" served in ten minutes for $3.95 - $5.95. Then during the first quarter of Monday night football, free appetizers are served at the bar. We wish we had realized this in time the night we were there; we apparently just missed chicken tenderloins and tiny hot dogs, which were evidently much appreciated by the bar customers, as they didn't leave anything for latecomers. Finally, every night at 10:00pm, a pair of tickets to a sporting event in the area is given away to a lucky customer. What more could a sports fan want?

As for us, well, we might just be back on Wednesday for more of those ribs.

The Movable Feast
THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN'S RESTAURANT REVIEW

A Bar Cafe

by Al Stankus

Long before Palm Beach had Au Bar, Boston had the Commonwealth Grille. During the good years, when banks were pouring out money as fast as the bartenders here poured Absolut, the Commonwealth Grille was packed to the rafters every night.

While few blue collar workers ventured in, it was as democratic a scene as you're likely to find in Boston. Gender, color, and sexual preference were all as loosely checked as the ID's of the foreign student brigade.

At 11p.m., the kitchen pushed out orders of grilled salmon, jumbo burgers, and a memorable meat loaf made with veal and sausage. In what the news weeklies had dubbed "America's Hippest City," this might have been its hippest bar. So successful was the Commonwealth Grille that competitors seized what was actually a very simple game plan: run a bar with a good mix of people, play loud music and serve interesting food until 1a.m.

Not only did the St. Clouds and Dartmouth Streets(now Papparazi) cut into the crowd, but the good times around here turned bad.

The restaurant brought in Chef Willard Chandler(literally from around the corner where he cooked at Tim's Tavern) to dish out his brand of Creole-Cajun fare. Although the room never regained the cache of its glory days, Chef Chandler's renditions of Paul Prudhomme's food, and a lively, arts crowd seemed to keep the joint somewhat jumping.

Then over the summer, Chandler left (a waiter said that he went to the Caribbean), the Commonwealth Grille went through some minor remodeling and then became A Bar Cafe. There's still plenty of posers, a late night menu, and some decent, if not spectacular food.

Grilled pizzas have become a culinary cliche, but there are some cliches that we all fall in love with. The thin-crusted pies(Valencianas) ranging from $6.95-$9.95 that come from this oven are superb.

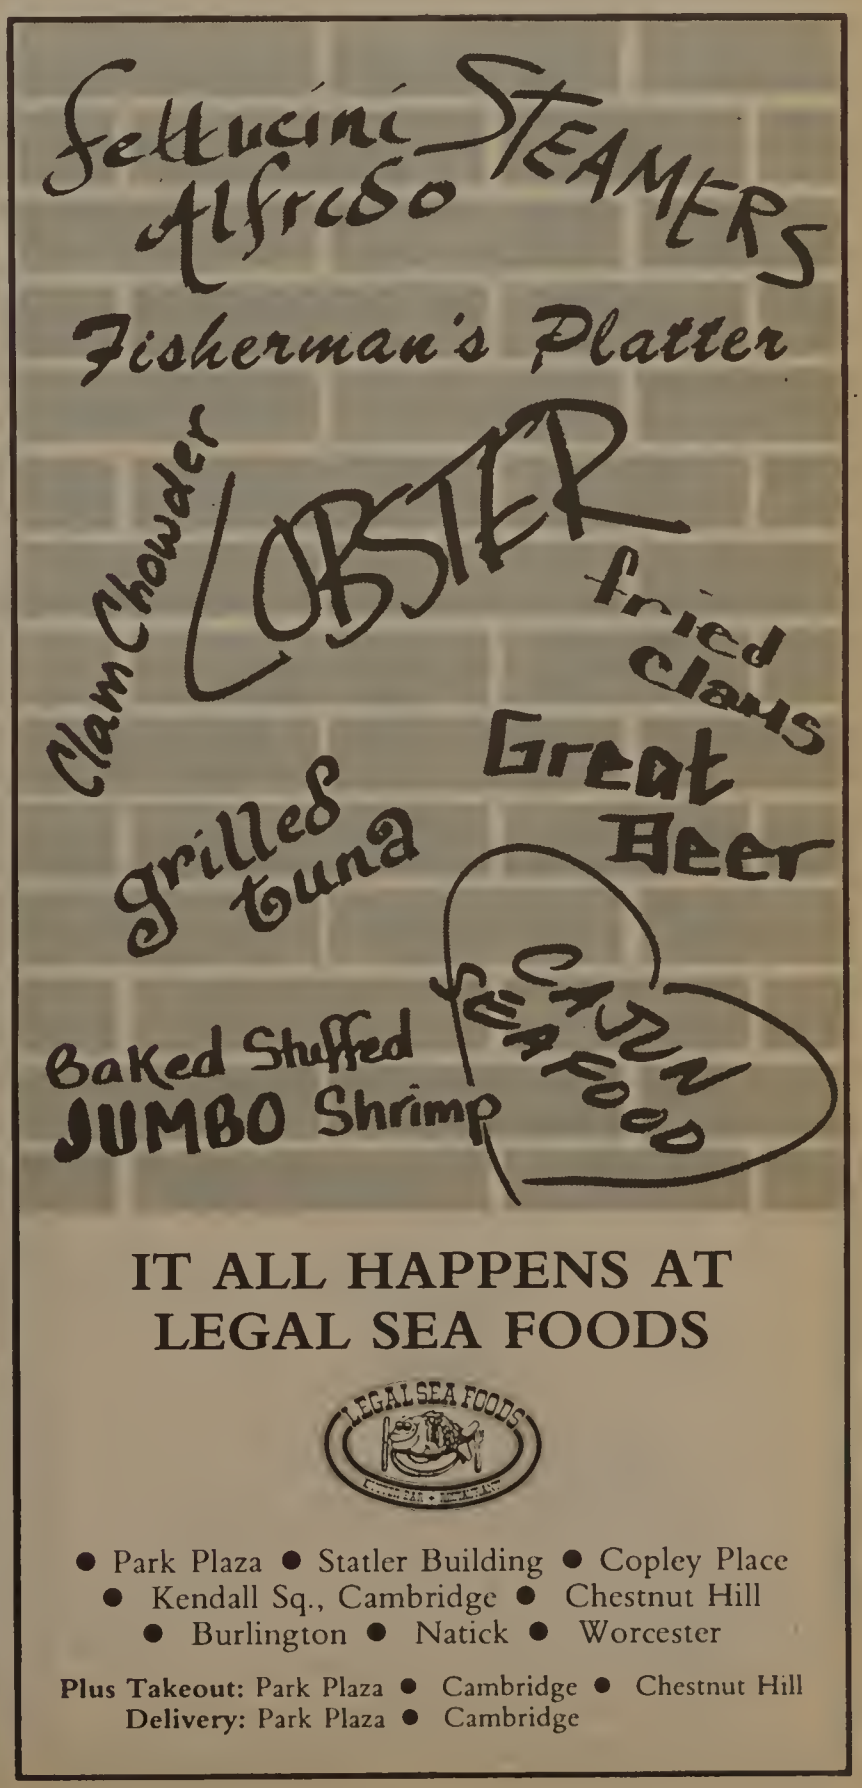
Built upon what is almost a flatbread dough, there is a slightly brittle quality to the base giving it a texture that falls somewhere between crunchy and chewy. Cut into four large pieces, the Valenciana was topped with slices of sausage, chicken, peppers, chunks of tomatoes, and brine-cured olives.

From the four salads, the Caesar($5.50), like everything else was ample in size. Though somewhat soggy, probably from sloppy drying, the Romaine was properly torn and chilled. Slivers of Parmesan, crispy pieces of garlic toast, and a creamy anchovy dressing completed the dish.

Main courses can be had from three listed pastas($6.95-$10.95), six entrees($9.95-$15.95), burgers($5.50 for the basic), and a few daily specials.

The seafood brochette was splendid and had some grilled sweet potatoes to make for a tasty diversion from the norm. It also contained jumbo shrimp, giant sea scallops, salmon, and summer squash rather than the advertised corn. Admittedly, it's difficult to liven up a brochette. All one looks for is cooked vegetables and fish or meat that's not overcooked.

The main problem with the special Indonesian Salmon was the cut of the salmon fillet. Thin at the edges and fat in the middle, the pan-seared slice topped with a rich, slightly spicy coconut milk sauce went from dry to perfectly cooked as you moved toward the middle. Like the brochette, it came with rice doctored up with slivers of red peppers and herbs. A side of mixed summer squash and zucchini completed the plate.



Fra Diavolo, literally "Brother Devil," is a Sicilian creation named for a Robin Hood-type who dressed as a Franciscan monk. Joining garlic, oil, tomatoes, herbs, and red pepper seeds, the spicy mixture is generally poured over lobster or shrimp. At A Bar Cafe, the pasta Fra Diavolo was a massive plate of overcooked tagliatelle noodles tossed with rings of deliciously tender squid, sea scallops, and shrimp all bound in the spicy sauce. Generous to a fault authentic, better tasting, and more interesting if the Fra Diavolo was made with chunks of tomatoes rather that just tomato sauce.

Places like A Bar Cafe are almost obliged to make good burgers. And if it wasn't for the dry, too-eggy bun, this one would have been very good. Cooked as ordered, it was thick, juicy, and tasted of the grill. The cheese was properly melted and the requested onions were perfectly sauteed. It came with wedges of fried redskins with the skin intact, that, while generally better than most local fries, could have benefitted from a longer stay in the Fryolator.

Deserts seem to change daily, and if forced to venture a guess, I'd say our slice of chocolate Kahlua cake came from Rosie's Bakery. If it didn't, it had the same unmistakably greasy tasting frosting that mars the cakes from this overrated bakery.

Serving as late as anyplace outside of Chinatown, A Bar Cafe when crowded provides a good scene. While different than a few years ago, for the post-midnight crowd, it is certainly one of the better places in town to mix fun and food.

Appeteasers

by Marge Chryssostomidis & Peter McNamara

André Chouvin, the youthful new resident chef of Julien, arrived in Boston just weeks ago bringing years of first class experience with him. Chouvin has worked in no fewer than three Michelin-rated three star restaurants. He was born and educated in the Lyon region, considered by many to be the gastronomic capital of France. After graduating from cooking school (where he was trained in the classical style), he cooked for two years with Paul Bocuse, worked a further two years with the Haeberlin family at their celebrated restaurant, the Auberge de L'Ill, in Alsace and then spent a year in the kitchens at Michel Lorain's famous A la Côte St.-Jacques in Joigny. When Marc Haeberlin became consulting chef to the Meridien Hotel, and a new chef was needed to execute the new menu at Julien, André Chouvin was a natural choice. He particularly likes cooking fish, seafood and desserts à la minute; some dishes that we can expect to see on the new menu are oyster and watercress soup, roasted halibut with a pumpkin sabayon, and pears in caramelized phyllo served with chicory ice cream and caramel sauce. He is a true workaholic, but when he can tear himself away from the kitchen, his other love is basketball.

Tired of meat and potatoes, but still looking for good hearty food? Go to 928 Mass Ave., Cambridge, where you'll find the recently opened Pampas, a Brazilian churrascaria. At dinner, 11-15 kinds of meat are cooked on a grill then carved at your table; just $15.95 brings you all you can eat. Lunches feature all you can eat of 18 or so salad items, 3 kinds of meat, plus rice and french fries for only $7.99. Co-owner Eduardo Peixoto managed restaurants like this in Brazil, while his partner and chef Joseph Knauss has previously cooked at Bread & Circus and the East Coast Grill. Hours are 11:00am-11:00pm daily; tel. 661-6613. Takeout is also available.

It's been many years since there was an Indian restaurant in Harvard Square, but now you can dine at India Gate at 24 Holyoke St., tel. 868-7160. The extensive menu includes many different kinds of breads and vegetarian specialties; dinner entrees are priced from $6.95-$10.95. Hours are 11:30am-11:00pm daily.

The Porter Square area, too, has a new restaurant: the already popular Half Shell, located at 1760A Mass Avenue, tel. 661-6580. This spotless little family style place serves breakfast, sandwiches, chargrilled items, seafood, pasta and whole wheat flour pizzas, plus daily specials all at low, low prices. Cholesterol watchers note that low fat cheese can be substituted on the pizzas if desired. Answer the daily trivia question correctly and you could win a free pizza. Hours for now are 7:00am-8:00pm Mon-Fri, 8:00am-8:00pm Sat and Sun, but in January will be extended to 11:00pm Thurs, Fri and Sat.

Harried but hungry shoppers at the Cambridgeside Galleria (plus, of course, those of you who work in the Kendall Square/East Cambridge area), will be glad to learn that lunch has been resumed Tuesday through Friday at Buoniconti's, where the Espress Del Giorno will accommodate anyone in a hurry and a full lunch menu is available to those who prefer to linger. The address is 143 First St., tel. 491-3663.

Eating lunch on the run? A Bar Cafe at 111 Dartmouth Street, Boston, tel. 353-0159 has introduced Box Lunches to eat in or take out Monday through Friday. For $4.99 you get the hearty soup of the day, a rolled pita sandwich (choices are roast beef, tuna, chicken salad or vegetarian), an apple and a cookie. Orders over $10.00 will be delivered free to Back Bay and South End addresses.

Here's news to delight lovers of Italian wine: Jeannie Rogers, wine steward and co-owner of Il Capriccio and Cat Silirie, sommelière at Rocco's have teamed together to produce a newsletter, Il Vino: a monthly review of wines. The first issue is just off the press and is packed with information about good Italian wines they have recently sampled, books on wine, and local wine-related news, including future tastings. Free copies can be picked up at Il Capriccio (53 Prospect Street, Waltham) and at Rocco's (5 Charles Street South, Boston).

What could be nicer for you and your children than to celebrate the season and at the same time help a good cause? Through December 22, the Boston Park Plaza Hotel is hosting Breakfast with Santa every Saturday and Brunch with Santa every Sunday to benefit the Annual Christmas Seals Drive of the American Lung Association of Boston. Santa, of course, will be present with his elf and carollers, and will pose for photos. For additional information and reservations, call 457-2272.

What ever happened to Maurie Warren? Long time devotees of Il Capriccio will certainly remember the founding owner/chef who "retired" from active involvement a few years ago. We hear that Maurie recently passed the CPA examination with flying colors, obtaining the second highest score in the entire country, and was awarded the coveted Elijah Watt Sell silver medal. Many congratulations and good luck, Maurie!

Throughout history, vegetarians have been viewed as "kooks" of sorts: the tofu activists who proclaimed their love for vegetables. They were the flower children of the '60s, the health nuts of the '70s, the animal rightists of the '80s, all sandwiched in the "where's-the-beef" generation.

One vegetarian asked, "Are we really just a peculiarity to be looked at by the census bureau?"

To a certain extent, being a vegetarian has always been something of a novelty - an enigma - to the understood meat-eating population, but these times are changing. The '90s have seen an upswing in the vegetarian culture, and calling yourself an "herbivore" is actually trendy nowadays. While most people would expect such trendiness to rear its head on the other coast, they'd be surprised to find that Boston's vegetarian culture is actually more alive than in most cities.

"Vegetarianism is definitely picking up a trendy quality," agreed Boston Vegetarian Society President George Eastman. "It has to do with a lot of intellectual types of people who are questioners. You're likely to find a higher concentration of people in Boston - particularly connected to all of the schools here - who are more free-thinking people. And Boston, of course, has a long-standing tradition of non-conformity. This is where Emerson wrote 'To he who is wisest would not be a conformist.'"

Non-conformity, however, is generally not sufficient motivation for changing one's lifestyle to such a large extent. Excluding animal products from one's diet usually is the result of four main reasons: animal rights, health, ethical, and environmental. However, their motivations for becoming vegetarian differ with extremes.

"They can be at real odds with one another," admitted Boston Vegetarian Society member Maynard Clark. "We have people who are vegetarians for ethical reasons, and then they smoke, and that comes into conflict with the vegetarians for health reasons."

But Clark added that sometimes, the means do justify the ends, with a common ground being reached at some level.

"I think we all feel if we can move toward a diet that's higher in fiber and lower in fat, richer in complex carbohydrates and freer of animal products, that would be an improvement from all perspectives. Everybody would agree that that is meaningful progress. But society," Clark lamented, "has not made meaningful progress."

Why? Is it inconvenient? Grabbing a quick bite at McDonald's is but a mere memory to most people, but is that sufficient reason to stay the course and maintain the status quo? Clark and Eastman say no.

"Food is just a matter of habit," said Eastman, a vegetarian for 28 years, 10 of them spent as a "vegan," meaning no dairy products or eggs. "It's a cultural-specific thing. It's not difficult to change your diet, but my own personal view is that people should be encouraged to change it gradually."

Clark agrees that a vegetarian lifestyle is not difficult, but admitted that compromises are necessary.

"I don't think there's any difficulty being a vegetarian," Clark said. "If you want to go out to eat a lot and you don't make plans in advance then you have to negotiate restaurants, but that's not a big issue. That's a lifestyle factor.

"That is a real fact of life in the vegetarian community," he continued. "A lot of vegetarians are making big compromises when they go out to eat."

For some vegetarians, it is not a compromise; it's a manifestation of inherent beliefs that animals are not on earth for humans' consumption. Not eating them, therefore, is simply evidence of the beliefs of animal rightists and those adhering to the anti-vivisection doctrine.

Frank Cullen, executive director of the New England Anti-Vivisection Society (NEAVS), said that manifestation often comes as something of a vision or enlightenment. "A lot of people have what I call the Epiphany," he explained. "It's a moment of clarity when you see things for what they are and you understand the connection. And you say, 'I'm not going to be a part of that.'"

As Milo from Bloom County once exclaimed, "Let's eat a pea for a porpoise!" as he called for strictly vegetarian diet in his household upon the discovery that dolphins and other sea life are exploited for food.

Cullen added "I would love to think that everyone is vegetarian for the sake of the animals. But the truth is the enormous, consistent, nonstop increase in vegetarianism is due to health. That's because they understand if they eat a lot of flesh food, they're eating a lot of poison."

But Cullen will take a vegetarian any way he can get them, because NEAVS oftentimes reaps the benefits of people's Epiphany in one way or another.

"Some people just start giving up meat, which allows them to start exploring," he said. "You see where else that starts taking you, and you start making other changes in your life."

Eastman concluded by saying that no matter what your reasons are for becoming a vegetarian, the key is the choice to decide what we eat.

"Given who we are as human beings we can make choices based on the consequences of selection of a certain diet," he said. "There are health consequences, environmental consequences, and ethical consequences. Animals can't do that."

In The Realm of the Spirits

CHAMPAGNE AND SPARKLING WINES

by Al Stankus

Wine sleuths have something over Champagne hounds.

They can sift and forage through bins and books in search of deals and real finds, whereas market forces and mother nature have made the concept of bargain Champagnes almost as oxymoronic as military intelligence.

Though California, Washington, Spain, and Australia bottle sparkling wine called "Champagne," they shouldn't technically using the label. True Champagne is only produced from one small region-Champagne, France, located in the northern countryside. Here, the growing season is shorter and the grapes that go into making Champagne are naturally more acidic than those which spend more time on the vine.

But, this geographic limitation creates something more finite than most products from the vine and isn't the only reason why Champagne deals are a thing of the past. It also has to do with the labor-intensive, 10-step process that the Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Pinot Meunier grapes go through.

Last year's Federal Sin Tax hit Champagne harder than most other spirits due to its luxury status. Champagne grape growers asked for and received price increases in addition to this and that explains Champagnes high prices. Luxury bubbles around $40 a bottle.

It's doubtful that any place, even California, will be able to match what has become known as "real Champagne," at least in my lifetime.

In an effort to help clear up the confusion of muddling through the shelves at your favorite liquor stores, we went to those in the know to ask for their opinions on personal favorites and good champagnes under $30.

Here's what they said:

Len Presutti, wine director of Martignetti's Liquors, said, "Without a question, my favorite is the '82 Krug ($140). It's delicate and complex. And to my thinking, if you took the bubbles out, you'd have a phenomenal wine."

In the under $30 category, Presutti chose the Billecart-Salmon ($25). He liked its "combination of a slightly creamy texture with crisp acidity."

The 1984 Iron Horse Late Discorged ($27) and the 1987 Piper-Sonoma ($14) ranked as his favorite sparkling wines. Presutti noted that the Iron Horse's structure is often what's missing in most California sparklers, while the Piper-Sonoma had taken on some aging qualities. "For its price," he added, "it's quite amazing."

Sonia Turek, long-time wine writer for the Boston Herald, was torn between the '82 Krug and the '82 Bollinger R.D. ($95) as her favorites, commenting, "Both are full-bodied and I like Champagnes with textures and complex tastes."

Noting that it was "ironic," Turek chose the NV Taittinger ($29) for her under $30 Champagne. "It's a lighter-styled Champagne, but in this case, it's so well-made and consistent that it's really very good for all around drinking."

True to the Taittinger style, she then selected Domaine Carneros ($18). A Napa Valley sparkler made under the auspices of the Taittinger estate, Turek called it, "A big-flavored Californian with the structure and finesse of Champagne."

From On The Square Restaurant in Watertown, a winner of Wine Spectator magazine's Award of Excellence, Marcia Bogue, one of the restaurant's co-owners says, "At the moment, the 1979 Gosset Grand Millesime ($59) is my favorite. It's dry, pleasant, elegant, and from a food standpoint, very versatile."

The Charbaut Brut Rose ($18) was her choice under $30, adding quite simply that, "It tastes very good."

Of the sparkling wines, Bogue is quiet taken with J from Jordan Vineyards ($25). "Of all the California sparkling wines that I've tasted, the J is the closest in taste to French Champagne."

Roger Ormon, wine manager at the Brookline Liquor Mart said, "Right now, my favorite is the '85 Deutz Blanc de Blancs ($45). It's not austere like most blanc de blancs. This one's really juicy and ripe."

No doubt reflecting his store's inventory, Orman is high on the Deutz NV Cuvee Lallier ($23). He called it "subtle," noting that it was "more delicate than heavy."

His favorite sparkler is the Sparkling Vouvray from Pierre Mabille ($14). "With its distinct Chenin Blanc fruit, this sparkler is a nice marriage of smells, fruit and bubbles."

When Howie Rubin, wine buyer at Bauer's Wine and Spirits on Newbury Street was asked to choose a favorite, he said, "That's like asking me who my favorite kid is." After a pause, he came up with the 1979 Salon ($135). "This is a very distinctive Champagne. Very light and delicate, it's in a league all its own."

The Billecart-Salmon ($25) was his favorite Champagne priced under $30. He said, "They don't make a lot of bubbles, so it's distinctive in its own right."

Like Martignetti's Presutti, Bauer likes the Iron Horse Brut Late Discorged because, "It has a distinctive dry and toasty flavor." He said the people at Iron Horse know what needs to be done if California is ever going to make a mark in sparkling wine. "They have a good grip on how to bring soil, grapes and growing areas together."

Since when do stuffed animals need glasses? Well, since the new mascot of the Eye Research Institute, Charlie the ChariBear, came to town. He's the symbol of hope for eye research and makes his debut at Charitoys on West Cedar Street in Beacon Hill this holiday season. Pick one up as the perfect gift to give. Charlie the ChariBear was created as a means for communicating the message of eye disease as a real problem among thousands of children today. "We can begin by bringing the problem to their attention," says Cathleen Allen, Manager of Charitoys. Proceeds from the sale of the bear help to fund research projects of ERI such as The Children's Low Vision Rehabilitation Center. How To Prevent A Bad Date

Seymour Kaubalz, our specialty foods critic is taking a week off from his usual tour de restaurants to recover from some very explosive food he ate last week at an undisclosed location. Mr. Kaubalz ate some serious gas-producing food on a date which resulted in a mass departure of dining guests at Chez Beean. Seymour ruined his date but alas, he no longer has to worry about uncontrollable explosions of gas. Not with Beano. That's right! Beano is a new product which, when just a few drops are placed on your food prior to eating, prevents those embarrassing moments we've all had. Seymour says "Now I'm no longer afraid of having a bowl of spicy chili, some garlic bread and even a nice big bowl of broccoli and cheese soup. Beano has given the word 'dating' a whole new meaning."
Made by AkPharma Inc., Beano is heralded as a product that "ends the social embarrassment and discomfort which come from eating Beans, Chili, Cauliflower" and more. There's even a brother product for your pet. For those outdoor types who like to do the "first date thing" while hiking up a mountain, you can bring along a little Curtail - a flatulence stopper for Rover! With this ingenious product, your romantic fireside conversations won't be ruined by an errant puff from your dog. Nor will you have to banish Spot from your two-person tent.

At A Horse's Pace

Want to add a little romance and cuddling to these fast-approaching winter nights? How does a little carriage ride through Boston sound to you?

Uptown Carriages of Boston will be stationed at Quincy Market on North Street, opposite the Bostonian Hotel throughout the winter to provide you with this opportunity.

The ride will take you through the North End, past the waterfront and back to Quincy Market, or through the Back Bay and Beacon Hill - whichever you prefer. Each tour lasts approximately 20 minutes to half an hour.

The cost is $25 for the first two adults, $5 for each adult thereafter. Children under 12 ride for free. There is a maximum load of five people per carriage.

The carriages are available Wednesday through Sunday nights, weather permitting.

If you want to make reservations and be picked up for a special occasion, Uptown Carriages will be more than happy to oblige. The cost for reservations is $75 and they can be made by calling 383-2224. If you have a more extensive ride in mind, the carriages are also available for weddings and Christmas parties as well, costing $400 for a two hour ride.

Skating on Glice

Marketplace Center has a new diversion for weary shoppers during the Christmas season: ice skating. Or rather Glice skating.

The 1,200 square foot artificial ice Winter Wonderland Skating Rink is a joint project between The New England Home for Little Wanderers and Marketplace Center, adjacent to Faneuil Hall. The rink is used as a fund raiser for the New England Home, which cares for children from dysfunctional families.

The ice skating rink is designed to resemble a frozen pond. It's surrounded by a white picket fence and pine and birch trees. The glice is made to skate like real ice but need not be cold or wet. So when you fall, you won't get wet! Laser lights also project giant blue snowflakes on the walls of Marketplace Center.

The rink opened on November 30 with an appearance from 1984 Olympic silver medal ice skating champions Kitty and Peter Carruthers, who were adopted as infants from the New England Home.

The Winter Wonderland Skating Rink will be open every day until December 24. The hours are Sunday through Thursday, 11:30 am to 6:30 pm and Friday and Saturday 11:30 am to 8:30 pm. The cost for a one hour session is $5 for adults, $3 for children 5-15, and free for children under five. Ice skate rentals are available only on the weekends. For more information, call the ice skating hot line at 783-7011, Ext. 240.

Treats In The Forest

There's a sanctuary in the heart of all the noise and traffic in Boston and you don't have to wear a white collar to be let in. It's Sweet Enchantments, a store at 229 Newbury Street. As the vision of owner Rob Allen, Sweet Enchantments is an indoor forest through which customers can walk as they hear the sounds of rushing water from nearby streams and the authentic sounds of the forest. Stroll in and out of trees as you pick chocolate from tree limbs or lift a stuffed animal from the forest floor. "For a long time, I dreamed of the perfect fun environment for candy shopping. It had to be really special, something that both kids and grownups would enjoy and it had to be in a unique location," Allen says. The inside of this wonderful escape from the monotony of shopping is a sight to be seen. So if you're looking for a shopping experience that's something a little out of the norm, then escape to Sweet Enchantments. Call 236-2282 for more information.

It's Murder!

How many people are required to solve a murder during their dinner hour? Well, someone has killed Buddy Evans and the only person who can solve it is someone who's in the middle of eating a plate of linguine. That's right. The Mystery Cafe at Three Cheers Restaurant on Congress Street features Murder in Four Courses, a Dinner Theater production in which the audience (in this case, the diners at large) are asked to participate in solving a murder right in front of their eyes. The cast of this murder mystery sometimes acts, sometimes sings and oftentimes may come to your table to ask if you'd like something more to drink. But no matter who's responsible for the murder, you'll have a blast at this dinner show of comedy and murder. Call 262-1826 for reservations.

It's A Tucker

Only 50 Tucker automobiles were ever manufactured. One of them is currently on display in Future Cars of The Past at the Museum of Transportation at Larz Anderson Park in Brookline. The 1948 Tucker Torpedo was visionary Preston Tucker's car of the future with a rear-mounted engine and a third middle headlight that turned in synch with the front wheels. The Turner is accompanied by some other rare vehicles including a 1927 LaSalle Carbriolet Convertible, a 1950 Studebaker Commander Regal Deluxe (bullet nose) Convertible and the 1962 Experimental Corvette XP755 Mako Shark. The exhibit reveals the fantasy, folly and fascination that the public has long had with rare automobiles by showcasing American cars that were pioneers of the imagination from the late '20s through the present . If you've never been to an automobile exhibit, then give this a shot. You won't be disappointed. Other designers in the exhibit include Harley Earl, Raymond Loewy, Gordon Miller Buehrig, Virgil Exner and Bill Mitchell. The museum is open Wednesday through Sunday from 10am to 5pm. Restaurant Listings

Grendel's Den
89 Winthrop St., Camb. 491-1050 A,D,MC,V $$
This casually elegant dining spot corners the international market on gourmet specialities. Some favorites of the Harvard Sq. crowd are the salad bar, cheese and chocolate fondues and Greek spinach pie. Imbibe Cambridge ale (the real stuff that doesn't give hangovers) at the bar; or warm your toes by one of three roaring firesides. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Gyuhama
827 Boylston St., Bos. 437-0188 A,D,MC,V $$$
Warm up with some sake at the sushi bar and watch the chefs adeptly wrap rice, seaweed and raw fish into delicious finger food. Or dine on cushions in one of Gyuhama's closed off rooms. One popular dish, Takara Fune - a Japanese style ship filled with boiled lobster, sashimi, vegetable tempura, beef teriyaki and shuma (pork dumplings), is served with salad, soup, rice and green tea ice cream. All for $23. Rock n roll sushi spices up the joint from 10:30pm-2am nightly. Waitresses step out of kimonos and into miniskirts and leather bomber jackets. The music rocks and even the menu offers a little more zing! Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Burlington Mall, Burlington 270-9700
Legals, rightly known as Boston's best fish house, has an unquestioned standard of excellence. Founder George Berkowitz lives by his motto, "If it's not fresh, it's not Legal". In fact, all the fish is personally inspected on the boats. One of many highlights is the Seafood casserole - a medley of salmon, scallops, shrimp and scrod. Open Mon.-Fri. for lunch and dinner. Weekends, dinner menu only.

Locke-Ober's 3 Winter Pl., Bos. 542-1340 A, MC,V $$$$
Opened in 1875, Locke-Ober's has been visited by such personalities as Marilyn Monroe, Joe DiMaggio, E.E. Cummings and the infamous Kennedys. The mahogany floors and chandeliers add to the "Turn of the Century" look at this Brahmin institution which serves up Continental and New England cuisine. Always a highlight is the Lobster Savannah (shelled, diced lobster prepared in a cream sauce with pimentos, bell peppers, mushrooms, sherry and Parmesan cheese). Lunch served Mon.-Fri. Dinner daily. Jacket and tie required.

Mary Chung Restaurant
447 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. $
This inexpensive Chinese joint located in Central Sq. is always full. The menu offers good Szechuan in heaping portions. Be sure to try Mary's specialty, a spicy broth with pork dumplings, bean sprouts and veggies.

Ristorante Marino
2465 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 868-5454 A,MC,V $$
See food prepared right before your eyes from behind a big picture window. Dine in a large atrium under a glass roof on one of several organic and chemical-free dishes. Marino owns several farms from where all the produce and meats originate. His farm in Natick (87 Pleasant St.) is open to the public. Try their porchetti, daily pig specials. Lunch Mon-Sat. Open daily for dinner.

5 Charles St. South, Transportation Bldg., Bos. 723-6800 A,D,MC,V $$
Dine on salmon fishcakes (a layer of potato pancake and salmon) under cathedral high ceilings and play with the folk art pieces on each table-they're for sale. Frescoes of putti and hanging sculptured suits add to Rocco's overall cheer. Desserts, including a chocolate chip cheesecake are the best part, so save room! You can sit at the long cherry wood bar that also functions as a gallery. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

546 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 547-9280 A,MC,V $
This Indian dive/restaurant at Central Sq. specializes in Northern indian cuisine. After some pakoras (spinach and cauliflower deep-fried in chickpea batter) and raita (yogurt and cucumber), choose from several chicken and shrimp tandoori (baked in a clay oven) and curry plates. Lunch Mon.-Sat. Dinner daily. Relax over chaiy (Indian tea) at the Sun. buffet-style brunch from 12:00-3pm.

Skipjack's Seafood Emporium
2 Brookline Place, Brookline Village 232-8887 A.D.MC.V $$
Fresh seafood will tantalize you at this light and airy, pastel coated restaurant. Try the tuna Skipjack style - prepared with a mild cajun flavor. Berber swordfish, a swordfish steak baked with Moroccan blend of 14 spices served with seasonal chutney, also pleases. Choose from a wide array of wines with your meal. Reservations are recommended on weekends.

Sorento's
86 Peterborough St., Bos. 424-7070 MC,V $$
Enjoy a wide variety of scrumptious italian dishes, at very reasonable prices. The gourmet pizzas are mouth-watering and served on traditional checkered table cloths.. You'd be hard-pressed to find a pizza as good as theirs anywhere else in town. The casual atmosphere and quick and friendly service all make for a quaint little italian restaurant. Free delivery is also offered in a limited area.

St. Botolph Restaurant
99 St. Botolph St., Bos. 266-3030 A,D,MC,V $$$
Dine in a trendy polished café or eat more formally upstairs. Either way, you'll love the italian (café fare) and Continental cuisine (upstairs) offered at this charming brownstone establishment. One critics' pick is the noisettes of lamb with tarragon fettucini, goat cheese and spinach topped off with an ample slice of white chocolate cheesecake. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Sun. brunch 11:30am-3pm.

Boodles-A Showcase for America's Microbrews

by Tobin Street

Jim Koch, Founder of Boston Beer Company pours one of his own

Melanie Dunea

Melanie Dunea

Beer consumption is on the rise. More often than ever, people are opting for a brew rather than a gin and tonic. As beer sales escalate, so does the demand for quality, and microbrewed beer is currently the subject of rejuvanated interest. Beer lovers are discovering that microbrewed beer is a unique alternative to the mass-produced, commercial beers. Over 15,000 barrels of beer are brewed by microbreweries every year, and their appeal just keeps on rising.

Boodle's in the Back Bay Hilton, 40 Dalton Street, recognized that trend and decided to capilalize on it. "There's no question our customers are drinking more beer and less hard liquor than ever before," says Greg Hargrave, General Manager of Boodles. Food and Beverage Director James Meagher and Hargrave have taken a formerly British bar and upscaled it to a microbrew bar serving over 60 microbrewed beers from around the country. "We thought that there were enough good domestic microbrews to appeal to the most critical of beer drinkers. We're appealing to the upwardly mobile, beer connoisseur," said Meagher.

Hargrave's dedication to educate his clientele on microbrews is evidenced by his plans to have monthly lectures by brewers of the beers carried by Boodles. Both Hargrave and Meagher embarked on this "libation face lift" after carefully surveying market trends and the Boston consumer who prefers quality over quantity. Meagher says, "We want to appeal to the twenty- to forty-year-old age group. The upwardly mobile beer connoisseur is someone we want in Boodles. We also welcome anyone who wants a change from their normal beer selection." But according to Hargrave, "if you still prefer a bourbon to a beer, we'll be happy to accommodate you." But don't be put off or intimidated by the fact that the bar is located within the Hilton. Hargrave said he isn't catering strictly to the guests of the Hilton.

The reason Meagher and Hargrave went domestic is logical. "In the past if you wanted higher quality or perhaps a modicum of status, you opted for European items - in cars, shoes, furniture, even beer," says Hargrave. But that's no longer necessary in your brews, he explained. Look no further than the grand old U.S.A to find robust porters, smooth ales, easy-going pilsners, and flavorful lagers. All in a surprisingly relaxed atmosphere.

"We're less formal and less stuffy than in the past," he explained. That past saw Boodles as a British style restaurant with hunting scenes on the walls and a menu consisting primarily of grilled items.

Schell Pils Beer, Dempseys and San Francisco-brewed Seizmic Ale are just a few of the comprehensive selection of beers that deserve a try when you visit. Dempseys is one excellent choice. After starting as a garage-sized brewery in Dublin, Ireland, the small brewing company closed its doors in the mid-1980's and sold the recipe and rights to the Hubert Brewing Company in the United States. Hence, the foreign-sounding name.

Other beers at Boodles have followed suit and set up shop in the states. Professional brewmasters are currently running microbreweries in this country, and their numbers are growing. In 1985, there were 29 microbreweries in the U.S. Today, there are 242. Though some of these beers sound as though they come from small-town breweries in the hills of Ireland, all are produced within the U.S. Boodles has made a complete turnaround. They've dumped European imports and "gone American."

Most of these native beers have interesting stories behind them and the bartenders at Boodles are well-informed about most. It's tempting to sit at the bar and learn the history of these brews, but be careful. Some are quite strong. It's easy enough to register a 9 on the Richter scale while imbibing a few Earthquake beers.

Boodles has something for everyone - no matter what your taste buds are craving. Diversity is the only thing that comes in quantity at Boodles, so plan to take an evening to taste the newest trend in American beer drinking - a microbrew.

WARHOL

by Jannette Tucker

Legendary pop figure Andy Warhol spent much of his life either behind a camera or in front of one, flaunting his eccentric self or working to flaunt the beauty in others. It's a fitting tribute, then, for his friends Gerald Malanga and Lowell native Christopher Makos to display their personal views of Warhol through their own camera lenses at the Robert Klein Gallery.

Makos chose from 150 photographs from his recently published "Warhol: A photographic memoir" to display with Malanga.

Warhol was a pro in front of the camera. Let's face it: the white-haired, awkward, diminutive man was peculiar looking and he capitalized on that look to the greatest extent. In fact, he truly was a pro in front of the camera when he became a Zoli agency model and later, a Ford model, since, according to Makos, he was so tired of constantly posing for the camera for nothing.

Because of his constant exposure, a photo exhibit on Andy Warhol could only be special if the person on the other side of the lens added a new dimension to the peculiarity of Andy Warhol. This is exactly where Makos' and Malanga's expertise rise to the surface. They were Warhol's friends. And who but a friend could be there in Aspen to capture Warhol on a mountain, all bundled up like a child in an enormous fur coat which he loved and wore, according to Makos. Halston gave it to him. Who but a friend could capture Warhol in his pure awkwardness in China? None other than Makos. He captured Warhol, with his tie characteristically askew, looking positively out of place with Chinese calligraphy artists in 1982. Given Warhol's known love for the absurd, it's nearly impossible for him to ever look out of place, but Makos found a time. He showed us that the person behind the camera matters more than simply photographic technique. In fact, Makos credits himself as "the wild one who brought out the kooky side of Andy," as if most of us thought there was any other side to Warhol.

Malanga gives us a little history to the Warhol figure, but interestingly enough, it's not his photographs that prove to be the most captivating for Warhol fans. Malanga actually found a 30-year-old, yellowing photo booth photograph strip of himself and Warhol. It's made more special by the inscription written down the side: "With luve from Andy 'Pie' and Gerry 'Pie.'"

It is Makos, however, who continues to reveal new looks to one of the most famous faces of our time. Makos' photographic memoirs of his famous friend resemble more of a personal photo album than a professional exhibit, which is exactly what makes the show a success.

Makos shows Warhol anticipating kisses from artist Salvador Dali, Liza Minelli, and even John Lennon. Who but Warhol could pose with the likes of Georgia O'Keefe, then turn around and snap a photo with John Denver and Olivia Newton-John and look at ease in all situations. Makos shows us Warhol could do it all.

Even dress in drag for a series of photographs. Makos reveals to us, without any doubt, that if Warhol was a rather peculiar looking man, he made an absolutely abominable woman!

Makos also whisks us, and Warhol, on an international tour. A special photo of Makos and Warhol, rowing a boat down the Bois de Boulogne in Paris in 1981, opens the tour, which continues through London, Germany, China, and Italy. Makos takes us on a visual journey of Warhol with his friends Debrah Harry of Blondie and artist Man Ray. There's Warhol, looking a little odd with a couple of bikers from Greenwich Village, they decked out in leather and appropriately dressed the part, Warhol awkwardly in his suit and tie, askew of course. Warhol again, with a nude model, working on a photo series of the human called "Sex Parts." Makos takes us to all of the exciting places Warhol once knew, including photos from The Factory, his famed studio in lower-Manhattan.

Malanga also donated many Factory photos to the Robert Klein Gallery for the exhibit. Although none of the photos were of Warhol, we are reminded of his sheik Factory days as Malanga chronicles "Andy Warhol and his Circle." The photos include those of Allen Ginsberg, Lou Reed, International Velvet, and Salvador Dali - all of the heavy hitters associated with the pop circus of intrigue known as the Factory.

The exhibit ends with a Makos photo of Warhol taken shortly after he was shot in the '60s. A woman who was a member of the extremist anti-men group S.C.U.M. went into the Factory and shot Warhol in the abdomen. Warhol proudly displays his recent bullet wound in the photo, not knowing then that the wound would inadvertently kill him in 1987. Warhol, after spending time in the hospital for the gun shot, vowed never to return to a hospital again. When he had gallstone problems in the '80s, therefore, he ignored the problem until it was no longer avoidable. He went to the hospital, and a combination of waiting too long and incompetent care sent him into cardiac arrest after the operation, and Warhol was gone.

In his book, Makos said his relationship with Warhol resembled that of brothers. Warhol called Makos the most modern photographer in America. The combination of the two creates an extremely insightful photo exhibit about an overexposed man.

"Warhol and His Circle," concurrent with the exhibition "Shaman and Star," Joseph Beuys and Andy Warhol work, is on display at the Robert Klein Gallery, 207 South Street, until Jan. 25. For more information, call 482-8188..

Lost in Yonkers - A Mixed Treat

by Nancy Leonard

Brooke Adams, as Bella, and Mercedes McCambridge, as Grandma Kurnitz in Neil Simon's "Lost in Yonkers" now playing at the Shubert Theatre

At the Shubert Theatre, Neil Simon's "Lost in Yonkers" can best be regarded as a mixed treat. It's funny, heart-filled, and consistently engaging. It's also plagued with transparent playwriting and one-too-many cliches.

Acknowledging his early television career, Simon begins the evening in high gear. No theatrical mood-building for him. In the opening ten minutes, two young brothers, Jay and Arty, describe Grandma Kurnitz as a cold and unloving woman with a problem-ridden family. They don't relish the prospect of having to live with her, yet they have nowhere else to go. The performances are first-rate. As Grandma Kurnitz, Mercedes McCambridge is a crabbed old woman, quietly determined to have her way. It's a subtly understated characterization, lacking only some ethnicity to give it flair. This Jewish grandmother could be lost in Duluth. Their mother is dead, and their father, Eddie, is in debt with her unpaid medical bills. It's 1942. He has a wartime job selling scrap iron in the South.

As Jay and Arty do their time in the darkly furnished apartment over the Kurnitz Kandy Store in Yonkers, Simon's focus turns to other family members. The boys are the comic heart of his play, while the flawed family relationships give it meat and meaning. Grandma's mean-spirited and demanding ways were born out of a need for survival: "if you get hard and strong, you will be able to take care of yourself." She "took care" of herself after a horse crushed her foot in Germany, and she buried two children and a husband. She tried to raise her remaining children to be tough and live normal lives.

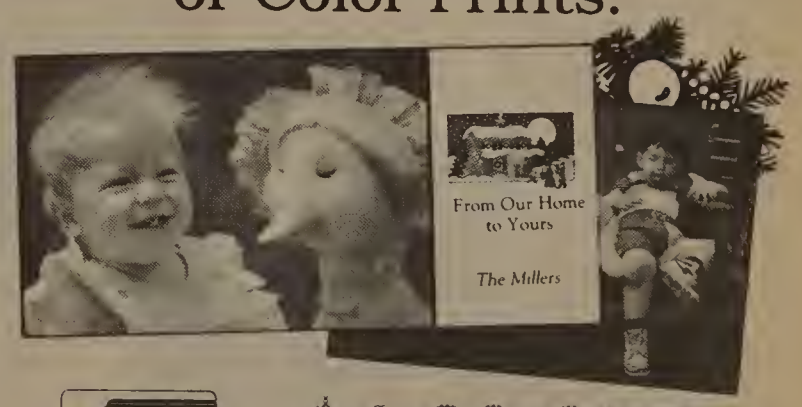
But a life void of love takes its toll.

Aunt Gert has bad lungs and can't talk right. Uncle Louie is a light-fingered, petty crook. Eddie, the cry-baby, escaped to a loving marriage, distancing himself and his boys from the tyrant he feared. Aunt Bella (played by Brooke Adams) lives with Grandma and is not all there. At age 35, she remains an effusively good-hearted child, with muddled thoughts and feelings. Adams is luminous as Bella. Her mental malapropisms and effervescence provide a compelling focus to the evening and her longing gives it soul.

Smoothly interweaving jokes and observations, Simon builds his play to its raison d'etre: a climactic confrontation between Bella and her mother. The scene, in which the young woman begs for a chance to marry and find love, is stunning. The wrap-up is less effective, and smacks of a need to end the play. There's no great turnabout— the curtain rings down on a restrained atmosphere of hope and better understanding.

Gene Saks' direction energizes the evening and gives it nice appeal. There's zip in all the comedy, not least when Bella assembles the family and gets stuck starting her story.

Jeff Maynard and Alex Dezen are good fun as Jay and Arty. They're bright-as-a-new-penny comedians, and delightfully resilient under Grandma's iron discipline. New Eisenberg's thuggish Louie is an appealing Cagney/Bogart cartoon. Martin Shakar is less successful as the honorable Eddie. His earnest 1940's father veers into melodramatic caricature. Carol Harris is fine as the vocally troubled Gert.



Santo Loquasto's heavily furnished, brown-toned set, open to the Yonkers sky, perfectly evokes the period. His costumes are apt, but less evocative of the era. Tharon Musser's yellowish lighting establishes a weighty mood. A wonderful Edward Hopper-ish scrim of the corner candy store sets the opening scene.

Although "Lost in Yonkers" won the 1991 Pulitzer Prize and a Tony Award for Best Play, it packs less punch than those awards would suggest. It's certainly funny and engaging, but don't be surprised if you leave the theatre thinking it needs more strength and insight.

HOOKED ON HOOK

by Tobin Streett

Peter Pan has grown older but Robin Williams just gets better and better. Hook, which stars Williams as Peter Pan and Dustin Hoffman as Captain Hook, is a wonderful holiday movie with a message for corporate fathers who don't have time for their children: "Don't Forget Your Childhood." This movie has it all: well-staged fencing duels, explosively typical Robin Williams monologues, the heavy directing hand of Steven Spielberg and as much adventure and happiness as any one movie should own. No gore, no profanity and best of all, a happy ending.

Hook is the tale of an adult Peter Pan who's forgotten how important it is to remember your childhood. The boy who could never grow up returns to Never Never Land on a journey spent waiting for him to remember. Peter Banning (Williams) is a high powered attorney whose Christmas vacation takes him to England with his wife Moira (Caroline Goodall) and their two children. Banning's preoccupation with business disappears when his two children vanish into the night. It takes some help from Wendy (Maggie Smith) before Peter confronts his true identity and the reasons he has forgotten his childhood. And with assistance from the Lost Boys, and Tinkerbell (Played annoyingly by Julia Roberts), Peter recalls his origins and finds himself in the middle of an exciting new adventure.

Spielberg has left some holes in the storyline, however, that catches his audience in a state of limbo. We can't immerse ourselves into the world of make-believe because Spielberg (rapidly gaining the nickname "King of Cheese") hasn't given us a reason.

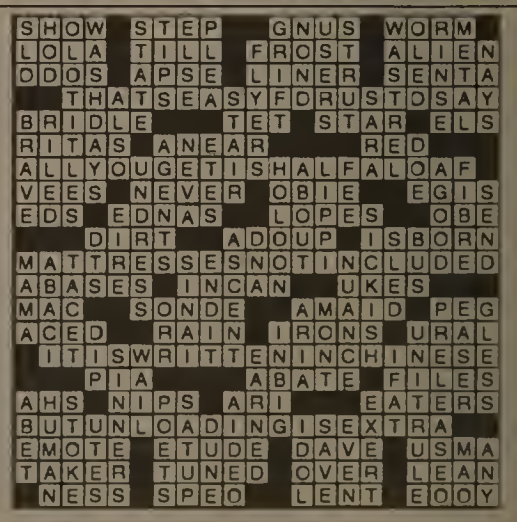
The big question is ,"Why has Peter Banning forgotten his past?"

The audience needs some answers, but contrary to Spielberg's past projects, Hook lacks a believable screenplay and we're never told why Peter can't remember his illustrious past. Quite a big thing to leave unexplained in a fantasy film. This is the major problem with Hook. Luckily enough, even with the holes in the storyline, it goes unnoticed until the end of the movie. Thank your lucky stars for the fast pace in the action. It keeps us from wondering what we've missed.

The special effects in Hook are impressive. The sets, including Hook's magnificent vessel and the island of the Lost Boys, are all visually breathtaking. Spielberg updates the original Peter Pan with the addition of non-traditional qualifiers, such as skateboards for the Lost Boys - something the original Pan lacked. But then again, this isn't Peter Pan.

Dustin Hoffman turns in a commendable performance. Captain Hook is devious, ruthless and as cunning as ever, and shares his hatred for Pan with the viewer through his sporting nature by giving Pan time to prepare for a fight to the death. Hook may be a pirate, but he's a good sport.

Spielberg isn't shy about using studio money to build magnificently colored sets, but he's caged the actors in a self-centered shield of mediocrity which seems to be the remaining coattails of a childhood onto which he's latched. But, if Steven Spielberg fails to bring us a believable fairy tale, shouldn't we wonder why? Sure, but let's be fair. We're judging a man whose E.T. and Close Encounters of The Third Kind were so realistic that his benchmark became something just short of perfection. Hook is a damn good film, and though it lacks some key explanations in the storyline, Spielberg can be credited with at least keeping this movie moving at a healthy clip. Shame on anyone who knocks this film and can't enjoy the good-natured spirit of this modern tale of Peter Pan. This movie stands on its own two feet. It's fun and a great escape from any Holiday doldrums. You'll leave the theater with an ear to ear grin. What more can you ask for?



Captain Hook (Dustin Hoffman) strolls through a throng of pirates as Smee (Bob Hoskins) and Jack Banning (Charlie Korsmo) watch.

"TILL the Clouds Roll By" (18 Across) is a Jerome Kern tune that was used as the title of his 1946 film biography. Cassiopeia (33 Across) is a constellation in the northern sky. A SONDE (75 Across) is used as a probe for observing atmospheric phenomena. The British spelling of "centre" in the clue for 48 Down was an indication to use the British spelling of FIBRE in the answer. The word TACET (67 Down) in a musical score directs an instrument not to play.

Star Trek VI- The Undiscovered Country

A Visually Stunning, Fitting Finale

by Jason Alexander

Capt. Kirk (William Shatner) and Dr. McCoy (DeForest Kelley) are held on trial in a Klingon court. Also starring Christopher Plummer as General Chang and Michael Dorn as Defense Attorney Worf.

Star Trek VI is visually impressive. It is clearly designed to be seen on a large screen with remarkable clarity of sound and vision. Nicholas Meyer's direction provides tremendous scope both in the space scenes and the panorama of a frozen tundra. But the expanse of these background and incidental scenes is such to clash with the much closer and understated scenes on board the various space craft. This inconsistency detracts somewhat from the personal and immediate feel of the film.

Born out of the imagination of Gene Roddenberry, Star Trek, though fantastic and rooted in science fiction, has remained a success because of its humanity and relevance. Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country continues the tradition, remaining pleasantly immediate amid high-budget special effects and stunning locations.

Billed as the last in the series, Star Trek tackles the problem of achieving lasting peace with a continual enemy. The parallel drawn to current world events by actor/writer Leonard Nimoy is obvious. The imminent demise of the Klingon Empire, expedited by enormous military expenditure, has made this peace necessary. Its achievemént must be accomplished in the face of those, on both sides, whose identities are so shaped by war that they can not allow it to be eradicated. In providing a situation so closely parallel to current events, the audience can easily both identify and understand the plot.

With such a basically simple plot the crew of The Enterprise is given a backdrop for their interplay, which is the real story of the film. Action in Star Trek VI comes in the form of a brief space battle late in the film. Contrary to previous Trek films, The Undiscovered Country emphasizes the strength of comradeship, an all-important loyalty to both ideals and friends. A loyalty that inevitably triumphs.

As for the portrayals of those crew members that we all know and love, there's nothing of any major surprise. Shatner, Nimoy and gang slip into their characters with ease. These are the same actors who have defined and given shape to their characters over the years. The bluster of William Shatner as Kirk and the quiet reassurance of Nichelle Nichols (Uhura) are so familiar to even the most occasional Star Trek viewer that they're almost beyond criticism.

However, let's not forget about the primary newcomers. Christopher Plummer (General Chang) almost exclusively vents warlike growls without coherence, even spouting Shakespeare with venom. Kim Cattrall as the new Vulcan on board the Enterprise is weak and restrained, almost appearing intimidated by the closeness of the regular actors.

The film also assumes the audience has some knowledge of the Star Trek saga. There is little explanation as to its history. But the hard-core Star Trek fan will evidently get a great deal of enjoyment from the odd throwaway line that is missed by those of us unversed in Star Trek lore.

Star Trek VI: The Undiscovered Country is a pleasant, entertaining and engaging film, successful because it allows the inherent humanity of its central characters to flourish against an unpretentious and credible plot. If this is indeed to be the end of the original Star Trek then it is above all, a fitting finale.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Beauty and the Beast
"A Delicious Fairy-Tale"

Walt Disney's delightful new film is a classic heart warmer. This romantic, scary and tender love story is for everyone! Beautiful bookwormish Belle, refreshingly a strong female character, searches for her missing father while fending off the egotistical, vain and vapid Beau. Her search leads her to a bewitched castle whose master, the hideous and seemingly cold hearted Beast, must return someone's love before the last rose petal falls to break the spell. Belle learns, as well we all should, that inner beauty is what really counts. Talking teacups and clocks, breathtaking animation and creative and amusing lyrics easily entrance the viewer in this delicious fairytale.

The Addams Family
Lots of Laughs - But Short Of A Plot

With Raul Julia as Gomez and Anjelica Huston as Morticia, this funny movie based on the hit tv series provides enough endless one liners and dark humor to cloud over the state of California. The Addams family has a problem making ends meet after being thrown out on the street by an amnesia-infected Uncle Fester, played by Christopher Lloyd. Fester is involved in a plot to claim the Addams' family fortune with Gomez' insurance agent, who has a small problem of locating the family vault. With the help of Christina Ricci as Wednesday, you won't be disappointed with much of this movie except for the weak plot.

29th Street
"It's Not a Wonderful Life"

George Gallo's effort to pay homage to the timeless classic It's a Wonderful Life falls short in comparison with an otherwise entertaining film. Frank Pesce plays Anthony LaPaglia, a man doomed to a life of good luck, including winning New York's first state lottery. The film centers on LaPaglia's relationship with his father, (Danny Aiello), whose life has relied on gambling. While Frank Sr. is plagued by a life of misfortune, Frank Jr.'s luck enables him to muddle through life, sans disaster. Gallo, however, errs when recreating Italian-American life in using stereotypes. Overall, 29th Street is a decently acted, feel-good movie that provides low-key entertainment but doesn't leave a lasting impression.

My Girl
"Compelling"

"My Girl" is an admirable film touchingly evoking the innocence of banana-seat bicycles. Set in 1972, it is not a sugary vehicle for child megastar Macauly Caulkin. Instead it's a compelling and frank story of a young girl confronting the twin demons of death and growing up. Anna Chlumsky is absorbing and unpretentious in the lead role and Caulkin, striped of precociousness, is a treat. However Dan Akroyd and Jamie Lee Curtis seem unsure of themselves. The ending is stretched in an unabashed attempt to jerk tears (parents be warned, it could be very upsetting for younger children) but certainly "My Girl" is worth seeing.

Cape Fear
"True Force"

Surely, the long-time marriage between Robert Dinero's acting and Martin Scorsese's directing has reached its ultimate perfection. Incredible film work coupled with bold scores of music create the dramatic depiction of a psychopath's rage. Dinero's crazed character returns home from prison determined to torment his one-time trial lawyer played by Nick Nolte. The lawyer and his increasingly frustrated family illustrate an anxiety that parallels the intense escalation of this startling story. The movies' horrific mood was enough to make one person in the audience actually get up and run from the theater. You will be blown away at this must-see film.

WOMAN ON THE STREET

Edited by Leslie Semonian

"What New Year's Resolution are you most likely to break?"

Rick, 28, Cambridge
When I go out drinking I will stop at my limit. Unfortunately since I'm Irish I haven't been able to determine what that is yet.

Carole, 27, Medford
To stop fantasizing about Bono every time I make love to my boyfriend.

Gerardo, 24, Brookline
Fooling myself that I can become a demi god to all god-fearing women without a buzz on.

Chester C., 22, Waltham
I guess that would have to be stopping myself from calling 900 numbers or at least keeping the charges under $200 per month.

Lauren, 24, Newton
Lose weight! If I add up the lbs. I wanted to lose with the years I've made this resolution, there'd be a negative reading on my scale.

Bill, 32, Canton
To wear my wedding band when I go out at night. Wait! What if my wife sees this?

COMEDY

HAZARDOUS TO YOUR HEALTH

by Tobin Streett

Friday night shows at Nicks Comedy Stop are literally riots of laughter. On these nights, the audience can be heard almost nonstop by any passerby who walks close enough to the doors. One reason for this endless stream of laughs is D.J. Hazard, a veteran in Boston comedy and the M.C. whose "Wild Man" antics entertain audiences as he warms them up for each new comedian. Hazard also unleashes a style of comedy that can be, at times, "hazardous" to your health.

D.J. Hazard is an enigma in the comedy scene. At least as far as what motivates him. Hazard began his career in comedy in 1979 when he tried open mic night at the Ding Ho in Somerville. Within several weeks, D.J. was the in-house comic and hosting shows by 1980.

Since then, this ex-graphic artist turned comedian has alternated between hosting and doing straight stand-up - all the time touring numerous cities throughout the country. He's currently working an average of five nights a week, while acting as M.C. at Nicks every other Friday. He enjoys the demands of hosting an entire evening of comedy. "I'm not trapped up there for forty minutes like some of the other comedians. I like it because it's a strange little courtship with the crowd." But as visible as he may be, D.J. Hazard remains a mystery to many people.

His mere physical presence is enough to scare some. But, as he says, "I look a certain way. It usually takes about 30 seconds for people to realize that I'm not going to hurt them. I'm a misunderstood Cro-Magnon." D.J. stands over 6 feet tall, with a beard and earring adding to his recently-paroled convict look. But he's all heart. D.J. performs for more than 30 charities annually and obviously isn't lacking a generous side. One benefit that he's done for several years is the Anorexia Bolemic Association fund-raiser. "The reason I do so many benefits? I want to go to heaven."

It seems odd that someone like D.J., whose obvious passion for travel is evident through his frequent trips to Canada, would remain in Boston for over ten years. But he's deliberately remained here while many of his peers have sought the limelight in cities like L.A. and New York. Not to say that he hasn't done gigs in those cities. "I still do New York, L.A., San Francisco and others but I like it in Boston." Hazard laughed as he explained why he has chosen to stay here. "I'm a slow starter."

But even for a self-professed Boston addict, D.J. keeps busy with a variety of projects, some which could cast him into the limelight in the next year. "For the past couple of years I've been showcased for the Just For Laughs comedy festival in Montreal. "I'm going back for a gig on New Years Eve and I also did a few weeks there in July." With Canada pulling him in one direction, you may wonder what's pulling him in the other. "I have some things I'm working on right now, like a record that's been in the works for a while. I have a bunch of songs in the can so it'll probably have around 20 songs." Hazard's songs are all original, at least as far as the lyrics are concerned. Some of his songs are past hits which he's lined with a "D.J. Hazard lyrical arrangement." Songs like "Ground Round" and "Back to Bed" are some of his more creative arrangements - coming at you with such flair and cynical delight that you can't help but to laugh.

No matter what he does, D.J. Hazard always manages to make people laugh, even if it doesn't appear to be his job. He's one of the harder working comedians around town. In addition to his local stints, he's had a television project on the side. Along with Tony V., another popular Boston comedian, D.J. may have a nationally syndicated show in 1992 but he's not betting on it. As for now, he'll just keep on doing what he's been doing. Making 'em laugh.

Off the Beatnik Path

Jane Elizabeth

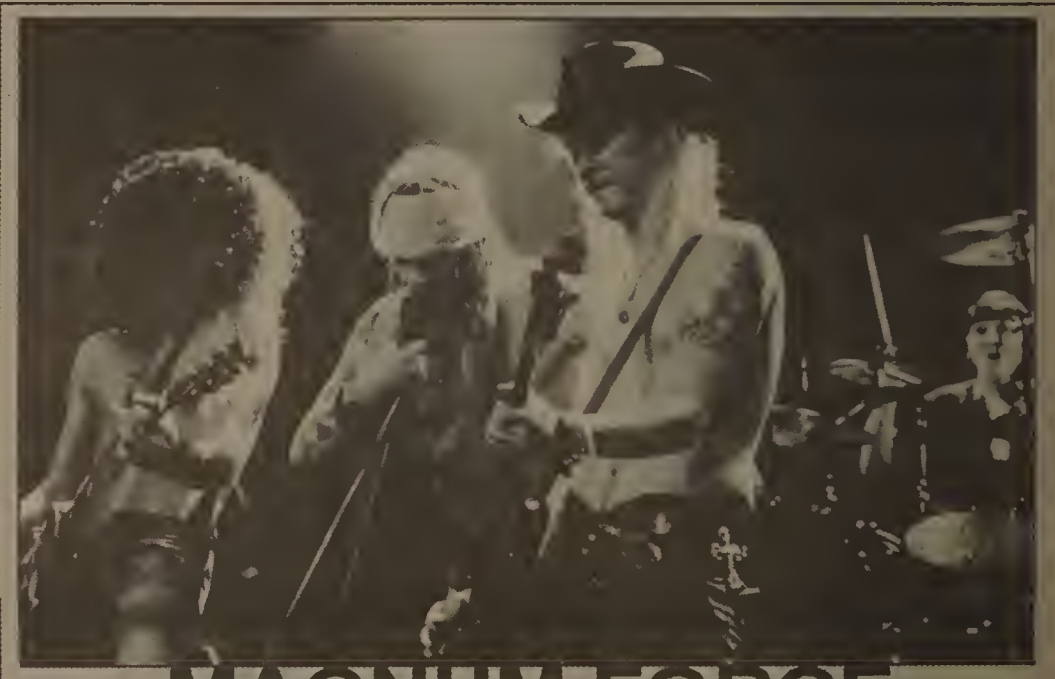
by Rey Roldan

I believe that everyone has a certain path," Jane Elizabeth says as her attention shifts anxiously down at the tape recorder next to her cup of coffee. She stares into it as if it holds some hidden truth. "But the ability and the work to get in touch with your path and to really pursue it takes a tremendous amount of effort," she says with a smirk reminiscent of actress Chloe Webb. "I think, so far, where I am today has definitely been my path."

For Jane Elizabeth, the path she has taken has really been a shortcut. With only eight months in the music world behind her, this local singer/songwriter has already established herself as one of Boston's most promising new musicians. Pulling together a tight band whose members include ex-Modern Lovers/Robin Lane guitarist Asa Brebner, ex-Atlantics/Willie "Loco" Alexander drummer Boby Bear and bassist/"child prodigy" Chris Kews, Jane Elizabeth practically popped out of nowhere and surrounded herself with established talent. A novice among professionals.

But her style is far from underdeveloped. Adapting the personality of a beatnik Madonna and a wardrobe to match, Jane Elizabeth knows the crowd even though their not too familiar with her. "I kinda came out of the woodwork. I have a musical past but not a band past," she replies. "I started playing piano when I was six. This is my first band ever. And it's really moving fast."

Her genre-bending songs have the diversity of a box of crayons. One minute weepy blues, the next countrified reggae and the next punkish rock and roll, Jane Elizabeth's music knows no bounds and follows no rules. "I'm like a sponge. I soak up and learn from people," she explains. One obvious source for her music is Country & Western. "I think [my country sound] was from Doctor Hook and the Medicine Show and Nancy Sinatra. I never listened to Country & Western per se when I was growing up, but my idol was Nancy Sinatra who made a whole country album."



There's also something ominously like Nico about her that really comes across in her live performance. "Maybe it's a reincarnated thing," she laughs. "I never really listened to the Velvet Underground or Nico. I don't know a lot about her but I feel she was real. I think [that urgency] is really missing right now. There aren't a lot of people out there that I can attach myself to and that's a loss. The only thing with Madonna that I can attach myself to is her positive outlook on life. She's a survivor. But it's nothing like Nico or Chrissy Hynde. [They] both had something to say."

To Jane Elizabeth, everything is a source of inspiration. "I learn from people who have had a centeredness and get right to the point in whatever they are doing. You know, like reading James Joyce. Musically, [I'm inspired by] the Psychedelic Furs, Cocteau Twins... anyone that I feel who hits the mark."

Like her inspirations, Jane Elizabeth has the eye of a marksman. Songs such as the dirge-like "Sylvia" and the Southern rock of "Mardi Gras" have the panache of a seasoned writer, drawing in both aesthetic pleasure and strong lyrical content. "['Sylvia' was written] when my grandmother was dying. It's about life and death. That's why I love The Addams Family. The reason why they had such a passion for life is because they always thought about death. They were aware of what it meant to be alive."

"The song 'Mardi Gras' is about this girl who works at this bar called The Mardi Gras," she explains. "If she keeps working there, she's not really going to go too far. It's really about knowing when to cut your losses and move on." In a seemingly ironic twist, Jane Elizabeth's past is not very different from the woman in that song. "I went to New York to become a star in '82. That didn't happen. [While I was there], I was trying to get a band together. But I wasn't developed musically and I had a lot to learn. I came back here to Boston and things started to happen. [My band] has gone through maybe three or four different line-ups till I got this, which is the ideal. This is what I've been wanting all of my life."

Jane Elizabeth's journey down her path is progressing rather quickly. Instead of taking a casual stroll, she's sprinting for record time. With local club dates in the making, she's determined to make her mark and follow the path she's chosen. The road is usually bumpy for struggling musicians with detours along the way, but Jane Elizabeth's is remarkably well-paved and direct. "I want to conquer the world." She hesitates. "I definitely want to do that," she adds with a foot on the gas pedal. Something tells me the light says, "Go!"

MAGNUM FORCE

by Mark Mantho

Say what you will about Axl Rose and his big mouth; but when he opens it to sing, something very unique and undeniably captivating comes out. The same can be said of the other members of Guns N' Roses about their respective instruments. To be sure, the band as a unit may sound like crap on any given night, but when they're good, they're very, very good. And last Friday at the Centrum, they proved that point, in spades.

It takes some serious balls to make a capacity crowd of restless fans wait more than an hour and a half between the end of the opening act's set (Soundgarden) and the beginning of their own, but that's exactly what the Gunners did, finally taking the stage at about 10:30pm. Out came Axl, dressed in trademark blazer and shorts, sporting a smirk and a few days growth of beard. Then on came the rest of the band, cranking up and charging into "Nightrain" (an ode to the simple pleasures of drinking and driving, from Appetite For Destruction). As the band made its way through two more early numbers-"Welcome To The Jungle" and "Mr. Brownstone" - it became apparent that Guns N' Roses had come to play, performing with both smooth professionalism and seemingly genuine enthusiasm. Rose in particular was in fine form, singing clearly and powerfully, leaving the distinct impression that he meant every word.

This was especially true in regard to the material from Use Your Illusion I & II. His leg perched upon a speaker, Our Hero leaned out into the crowd (though he did not, it should be noted, jump in and start a riot) and delivered his lyrical darts as though nothing else mattered, the venom fairly dripping from his tongue. Songs like "Double Talkin' Jive" with its bitter refrain ("double talkin' jive, get the money motherfucker 'cause I got no more...patience") actually seemed to energize him. Others, like the beautifully rendered "November Rain," which found continued on following page

JAZZING IT UP WITH RICKY FORD

by Jeff Briskin

Boston-born tenor saxophonist Ricky Ford is on a roll. He's just released two albums, Hard Groovin' (Muse) and Ebony Rhapsody (Candid). He's just completed a movie in Europe. And on December 3, Ford came back home to lead a group of aspiring musicians through a capsule history of jazz through the works of some of its most esteemed composers.

Braving the ice and cold, the Artist-in-Residence at Brandeis University drove from his New York home to Waltham to lead the Brandeis Jazz Ensemble in an evening of big band music featuring the compositions of pianists/composers ranging from Duke Ellington to Mal Waldron.

The twenty piece ensemble is comprised of a group of students supplemented by local jazz musicians. Ford's busy schedule allows only one rehearsal a week, a few short hours in which to turn young minds on to the essence of swing and blues lurking within the notes of the arrangements before them.

Ford is well aware of the limitations of the band and works hard to squeeze as much jazz out of the players as he possibly can. For example, after several tentative treatments of songs by Abdulla Ibrahim, Thelonious Monk and Ran Blake, Ford kicked up the tempo with two funky songs by Mary Lou Williams. Dissatisfied with the lack of communication between the horn and rhythm sections, he stopped the funky "Rosa Mea" in mid-bar and started it over. Then, illustrating the sound he wanted through example, he clamped his jaws on the mouthpiece and launched into a torrent of notes circling around the mid and lower registers of the horn.

Ford's is a big sound that comes straight from the belly; tough bluesy solos anchored in the hard bop tradition of Dexter Gordon and the breathy tones of Coleman Hawkins.

He learned his craft as a student at the Elma Lewis School and the New England Conservatory of Music in the early 1970's. His talent earned him gigs with Lionel Hampton, Mercer Ellington and Charles Mingus, and you can hear his uniquely identifiable sounds on the numerous albums he's made, both as a leader and with jazz luminaries such as Mingus alumni Danny Richmond and Jack Walrath, Ibrahim and fellow Bostonian Jacki Byard. And it's respect for his talent and dedication that has brought other jazz giants such as third-stream pianist/composer Ran Blake and the legendary bassist Milt Hinton to Waltham to play with Ford and the Ensemble.

Because the Jazz Ensemble features mainly amateurs, Ford is more concerned with sound than solos, but he's generous to his musicians, allowing them to take off from the charts if they feel fit. And he has no hesitation about using his own solos to stoke the fires of his tentative disciples. When he wandered around the bandstand during Waldron's uptempo "The Crowd Scene," he jammed with the trumpeters who responded with energetic solos, and playfully dunking the bell of his horn under the nose of the electric bassist who woke up and pulled off a nifty finger-pop riff. By the end of the finale, the band was loose, lively and enjoying its groove, thanks to the exhortations of its leader.

Ford is a man of endless energy who doesn't sit still for a moment. Before the last echoes of sound had left Slosberg Auditorium, he was already xeroxing arrangements for the next performance, scheduling rehearsals and advising his musicians on how they can improve their playing. He was the last person to leave the building and had the longest ride home. But he'll be back for another semester of concerts this winter and spring. And another group of young musicians will benefit from his inestimable experience.

Axl hunched intently over an electric piano, illustrated both his ability to construct a conventional pop melody and his newly-stated desire to channel a more nakedly vulnerable side of himself into the music he writes for Guns 'N Roses. A tip that both sides of the emotional spectrum can be successfully wed within the confines of the same group may have been the equally strong response to each approach; the cheers were never perfunctory.

Friday's show also showcased the not inconsiderable instrumental chops of the Guns 'N Roses rhythm section, comprised these days of monster drum machine Matt Sorum, newly acquired rhythm guitarist Gilby Clarke (late of L.A.'s Kill For Thrills), and old hand Duff McKagen, on bass. Together they provided more than adequate support, keeping a tight reign on the beat and rarely making mistakes or losing their cool. No mean feat, considering they've had a relatively short time in which to gel as an ensemble, and the fact that this was only the second date on the second leg of their tour. The keyboard fills of Dizzy Reed added welcome (if unremarkable) texture to the overall sound, which was further expanded by the inclusion of a female horn section (!) and two back-up singers, both predictably clad in MTV leather-slut getups which, happily, did not detract much from the vocal punch they brought to the mix.

Unquestionably, one of the high points of the evening was observing the sonic pyrotechnics of hard rock's resident guitar hero in his natural habitat. The lead guitar work of Slash is neither technically perfect nor fabulously original. Rather, it convinces in its sheer emotional intensity, somehow plumbing inner depths that connect in a visceral, intuitive way. Throughout the show, he displayed a consistently deft hand with the rhythmic and melodic mechanics of each tune, integrating the meat of the songs' chordal structure and his solos into a seamless whole. Cigarette stuck permanently to his lips, "Cousin It" hair hiding his face, Slash hunkered down and concentrated on squeezing out as much raw emotion as one guitar would allow. His phrasing was, for the most part, impeccable, the sound flowing like multi-colored water on "Estranged" and especially, "Civil War." He saved the mind-fuck solo for an extended interlude sans the rest of the band, and for the encore, "Paradise City." Nothin' fancy you see, just straight ahead, honest-to-God rock'n roll.

And that, more than anything else, is what Guns N' Roses are all about. Axl may run off at the mouth, and he may be an asshole, but he is real, as is the music of his band. The people in the audience in Worcester knew this, and they appreciated it. All you had to do was look around at the fists pumping resolutely in the air when the band kicked into "Don't Cry" or the flawlessly executed "You Could Be Mine" to get the message. For their part, Guns N' Roses seemed more than pleased to give their fans everything they had, and then some. No one would ever expect less; no one could ever ask more.

•TIA'S Marriot Long Wharf 227-0828, 200 Atlantic Ave., Bos.. A favorite open air meeting place near the harbor. The crowd is young and single. It gets crowded on warm nights - especially right after work - so arrive early. No cover. Casual dress. Live a capella group Sun. 3-6pm..

•VENUS DE MILO 421-9595, 11 Lansdowne St., Bos.. Attracts a Euro crowd as well as the usual crowd of college students and young professionals. Hip Hop, House and Funk music by DJ. Wed. night is gay night. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Know who you are and dress accordingly is the club's policy. 21+ unless otherwise noted..

•VERTIGO 426-7744, 1 Necco Pl., Bos.. This progressive dance club offers a wider array of musical options than its neighbor across the street, The Channel. The crowd varies depending upon the act, as does the cover. No dress code. .

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Mon. is Blues. Relax over a beer and get into the spirit. Don't be afraid to sway in the aisle when the music jams. It's always smoky and crowded, but Wally's has heart. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat. .

Mon23rd.--Blues Night Mon30th.--Blues Night

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb.. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress. A must for any Reggae lover..

Wed18th.--Kirkland Bodie Thur19th.--Solid Earth Fri20th.--One People Sat21st.--One People Sun22nd.--Roll With It Thur26th.--Positive Bent Fri27th.--Loose Caboose Sat28th.--Loose Caboose Tue31st.--New Years Eve w/ Cool Runnings

•WHO'S ON FIRST 247-3353, 23 Yawkey St., Bos.. A sports bar nestled just a baseball throw away from Fenway. Who's plays host to a mix of jocks, college students and baseball fans. (Yankee fans, beware) DJ music and an occasional live band provide the dance beat. Cover varies from modest to moderate. Casual dress. Free buffet and singing contest Fri. afternoons..

Wed18th.--Call for listings.

•WILLOW JAZZ CLUB 623-9874, 699 Broadway, Ball Sq., Somerville. An alternative Jazz club that's seemingly dark and bleak; but fans love the place. Call the Concert Line (421-9333) to find out what acts are playing. Moderate cover. No dress code..

•ZANZIBAR 451-1955, 1 Boylston Pl., Bos.. This large two story dance club is modeled after a large Caribbean dwelling complete with palm trees. Top 40 and Dance music is played to an upscale clientele. Local hotel concierges often recommend Zanzibar as a choice pick to their guests. The cover is heavy but varies. Jacket and tie required..

Joey, thanks for the wonderful romantic evening last Saturday. You are the last real romantic. I didn't think you could top the white ultrastretch limo with the triple rear axles and the chauffeur in a gorilla costume, but when you fondled my ass in front of 1300 people while we danced at the Roxy, I knew this was the most love-filled, stylish night of my life. XXXXXX. Trixi.

"Satisfied Woman?" That, my darling, is an oxymoron. Doris Trout, on her way to Chinatown yet again.

Neighbor, the reason I hemmed and hawed when you knocked on my door this morning to ask "what kind of noise" I had complained to the landlord about you making was because I didn't feel too cool standing there in front of someone like you while wearing nothing but a bathrobe and a sheen of showerwater and replying, "Well, gee, it sounds a lot like one guy about 2 in the am, with a certain amount of spanking thrown in for good measure. Takes a licking, and keeps on ticking, eh wot?"

Eye thought it would be a good career move. Norma Nathan.

Now, hold on a minute, son. That last one was real rude. You should be ashamed of yourself, makin' fun of dead people. Elvis.

You know when you've hit rock bottom? When they take your name off a sandwich at the Stage Deli, that's when. Marvelous M.H.

Hey dough boy, get a job and get some furniture. Is second A.D. short for doughnut runner. Nice fat sacks on your elbows. Louis C. Horowicz III.

Anthony, stop kidding yourself. You're never going to make it as a hair stylist. Drop out of hair and beauty school now. You're too old and you have no talent. The best thing you could do with a pair of scissors is castrate yourself.

Billy, next time you're miserably depressed because some tramp broke your heart, don't look my way, friendship only goes so far. You may look like a truck but you're really a bambi. Who needs an emotional wreck. Hurt my feelings once and its an accident. Twice and you're putz. B.M.

Boston, thanks for the last 19 months. . . the music, the clothes, the clubs — the Boston scene; but to all you English wannabees and Axis ass kissers — you're just a bunch of wankers. Respect and love to Candy M. and Jen F., also Trish (with the hat) at 'FNX party. Nicholas (I live just down the road from the wonderstuff!) Thank you.

V.W. Cutie Pie, One person truly loves and adores you and M. - always has me. Yeah, I've made mistakes, but I'll make things right between us, I promise, if its broken, let's fix it. Let's talk about things any time, any place. I love you. Your S.O.

Bob Mc. I'm your Gold Pass slut. Love Kim.

Karen T. Do you know how to use a goddam telephone. I waited all night for your call last Saturday, and missed the concert. Next time I'll find a girl with some class.

Camy, I'm an American man now, I want half.

Deb the uptight vegetarian, you sat in my restaurant the other night and I told you that you were getting the 100% tofu burger. I lied, we put hamburger meat inside, could you tell?

Pet, I apologize for drooling all over your couch the other night, its just that I couldn't take your new Victoria's Secret collection. Any time you want me to model, I'm game. Bill.

Tony and Bob. Oh, I'm sorry, you mean you didn't want me to tell those two women about the New Years Eve Black Tie. I forgot.

Katie, you never said you were a virgin.

Kurt, we all saw what you did to the deck the other night at the game. We found the original one the other day. Just a warning, there are five ex friends of yours on the loose in this town, and they might just end up in the wrong place at the wrong time. Catch my drift? Friend.

To the snotty law T.A. in intro class. Want to know what the class thinks about your loss of the term papers? Take a look at your car.

Jim, I couldn't bear to tell you in person. I knew you loved the Impersonals so I'll tell you here. I ran off to Florida with Frank.

Bobby, stop peeking into my bedroom window, I see you in the bushes through my curtain and my boyfriend is ready to kill you. For the last time, we're through. Katy.

Simon, rumor has it that you have a weakness in your heart for chocolate, so the gals decided to send you a present, take a look at your new suede outfit. Looks nice doesn't it?

Jen, no I don't really care for you. When I said I loved you, I lied. When I said I wanted to marry you, I lied. When I said I respected you, I lied. I've actually been planning on dumping you for half a year now. I might as well stop leading you on now. Its over.

James, you stressed out son of a bitch, you cracked when the pressure started to mount. Couldn't take the heat, now the whole project is down the drain. We've been working for months day in and day out, you should have jumped ship a long time ago instead of taking us with you. Sincerely, The Inner Circle.

Don, Congradulations on your newest of acquisitions. Another human being to shove around, abuse, neglect and then dispose of. We all feel sorry for her, but don't know quite how to put it to her.

Shela, your disgruntled ex showed us the pictures of you that he took. We were horrified. Those pictures were so disgusting they would make Madonna blush.

Paul, just a friendly reminder to you about that nice restaurant you own. I counted three cockroaches while eating the other night. Try cleaning the place up, you'll be out of business in a month.

Laddy, welcome home to Boston. Now that you're back, explain why they call you that.

Clark, you can stop contriving all those clever lies. We all know why our pumps are all stretched out. Just buy us some new ones and we won't tell a soul. Your roommates.

Heals, Is it true that Gib is a good french kisser?
The Boys

To the traffic cop who pulled me over the other night on north Beacon St. You forgot your handcuffs on my nightstand.

K.C. I met you the other night over a a few drinks and some romantic piano music, I'd love to see you, but can't for the life of me remember your real name, respond here.

Bruce, you stud, try calling for a date for once at least two hours in advance. Else I'll continue to refuse you.
Karen S. Hows your husband and kids, I bet Jim would be suprised to know?

To the poor lost soul who approached me last week in Harvard square asking for directions. It was more than a pleasure to help you, and by the way, thanks for your wallet.

Jim, when you're finally ready to get serious, call me, I'll be long gone.

Chris, give it up, the lipsick and perfume, who are you trying to fool, you;'ll never make it in Boston, give it up.

To the extremely bright and articulate P.H.D. student I met in the market the other day. I really do think your mother dresses you funny!

THE GODS MUST BE ART OBJECTS

Inspirational - and it is no sacrilege to also say decorational - the Gods and Goddesses here lend themselves wonderfully to museum-quality contemplation, at home. They include Greek and Roman deities, also Hindu, Pagan, Celtic, and Christian ones. Ice-cream white statues of Apollo and Diana ($95 the pair) are part of a traffic jam of antiquity that also comprises the Winged Victory-that armless rusher-forth who guards the top of the stairs at the Louvre-this one recreated in fiberglass. For $1500, a huge statue of Mercury that emanates arrestingly from the mouth of a prone man representing the wind, is famous as the symbol of "flowers-by-wire." And a pure-white Diana reclines on a sofa to match. These Greeks and Romans sit side by side with such resplendent Egyptians as Isis and Osiris, one in particular having an impressive gold-red-blue-green-painted wingspan. There are stretchy black Egyptian cat gods, tall and full of ancient rectitude, as well as bird and cat-headed human figures. The colorful, folky Virgin of Guadelupe from Mexico, and a beautiful, delicately etched head of St. Cecelia on a plaque are proof that female deities are gaining equal rights. So are the New Age tapes and calendars of mystical and poetic Goddessland. Next to these fine fakes are real antiquities - coins, mummy beads, tear vials and teeny mummies that come with certification of authenticity.

According to Merle

TALK BACK TO THE BULLY

Bombardieri, social worker and workshop-leader, we all have a critical interior voice - call it a harsh superego, call it nasty psychic meter maid. She calls it The Bully. This is the voice that oh-so-counterproductively tells you that you aren't good enough, and if you have accomplished something - well, it definitely was not enough. The punishment dealt out by this entity needs to be strongly countered - and that's where the Talk Back To The Bully workshop comes in. Merle Bombardieri believes that simply telling yourself how good and nice you are - the technique called Affirmations - isn't enough. So in roleplays and dialogues, The Bully, whose wily ways have been detected, is first acted out by the sufferer, and then given a sharp talking-to by that person - as if the Bully were a recalcitrant external being. While it is understood that the Bully won't ever truly get it, and won't buzz off, an assertive throaty defense is mobilized against it, and it's inspiring to hear the timorous Bully-ee begin to talk in more menacingly authentic tones. The compassionate voice, angel to the Bully's devil, is invoked at the same time and the work-shopper is encouraged to turn down the volume of the one while turning up the volume of the other. Merle, with her own actual soothing voice, advocates well for the softer 'path of peace' - after the necessary shouting is over. Dog Bites Man. Ha!

If the Marx Brothers, James Joyce, Chagall, Duchamps, Stravinsky, Bemelmans (of the children's book, Madeline) were all put into a blender — add a squirt of Dr. Seuss with his trademark waterfalls of rhyme — the result might be Maira Kalman, author & illustrator of the Max books (Max Makes A Million and Ooh-La-La Max,) whose allusions, both verbal and pictorial, dance across a century of audacious grownup writing. Max the 'Wunderdog' is the dreamy, rhymey Dog Poet of New York, and his adventures, flickering along in skipping - stones of association, are told partly in Jewish schtick, partly in a French accent. Max meets such people as Marcello, the architect who builds upside - down houses, Bruno, who paints invisible paintings, and two men both named Otto with two dogs also named Otto ('the Quattro Otto'). Then there's the narcissistic artist Ivan Kazlinsky ("Ah, Max," sneered Ivan. "Still writing those stupid little poems that nobody likes? Bring me a drink, why don't you. I was ready to rip the pointy beard right off his face. I was ready to give his ugly pants a bite so big he would be wearing shorts. But instead I looked at him in the eye and said Ha!") 'Ha!' -Max's gingery refutational bark - also the very last word in 'Max Makes A Million' - laces through these crazy, lazy, cozy books that are for children, as they say, of all ages.

WANNA PARTY?

by Jannette Tucker

Let's face it, this time of year stinks. It's cold, Christmas and New Year's are over, there's nothing to do and no holiday is in sight for months. What else is there to do but. . . throw a party!! And we're not talking about just any party where all you have to do is roll in the keg and snag a few bags of potato chips. Splurge a little and make that party a memorable one. There's more to do than simply hire the cliche stripper to make your party one that you and your guests will deem memorable. No matter what your budget is, there are special events you can add to your party that will keep people talking.

Champagne Fountains: For a mere $39 a day, you can add a festive conversation piece to your party and keep the drinks flowing. Roger Gamache, owner of Taylor Rental Center of Wellesly, said most champagne fountains are rented for weddings. He added that many are used to add a festive touch to regular parties.

"I can't say there hasn't been any beer, soda or punch put in these fountains, either," Gamache said, eluding to the fact that no one is limited to just bubbly.

Champagne fountains come in three- and five-gallon sizes. Gamache said that once the fountain is in your house, just plug it in and fill it up.

"It's also a convenience thing," he said. "It allows you to just fill it up once and not have to keep opening bottles. But it's also a spectacle; like a center piece."

Jukeboxes: Now that your drinks are taken care of, move on to the all-important music. If the music flops, your party flops, so rather than just turning on the radio, or burdening yourself with CD and album changes, rent your own jukebox for the evening.

"When a jukebox is at a party, we hear that all the wall flowers get up," said Ann Cummings, owner of The Great American Jukebox Company. "The jukebox attracted them. Most people say it's more of a conversation piece than they anticipated."

When one of Cummings' 100 jukeboxes is rented, she gives the customer a print-out of all possible music which can go in the box.

"That's why we're so popular," she said. "You get exactly the music that you want to hear."

Jukebox rentals start at $140 for the night. The more difficult the delivery (with such obstacles as winding staircases), the more expensive the rental.

Comedians: Turn your home into a comedy club and add jokes and laughs to your party. Bring in a comedian from Boston Comedy Company (BCC).

"This is a great way to entertain because comedy is really hot right now," said Will Bryan of BCC. "It adds variety to the party and it's something special. Not everyone brings in a comedian to their party."

For $250, you can hire a headlining Boston comedian who will perform a typical 45-minute set. The more television credits a comedian has, the more expensive he or she will cost. The Boston Comedy Company works with over 250 comedians in the Boston area, including Marci Rose, Teddy Bergerone, Mike Bent, Tom Clarke, Anthony Clark, Charlie Hall, Mark Rossi, Bob Lazarus, Paul Wayne, Billy Martin, and Tony Rose.

Since the BCC works closely with comedy clubs and the comedians, Bryan said "we can usually get better prices. We know so many comedians that we can fit your bill."

Karaoke: Are you too shy to get behind the mic at the bars but are dying to try that video sing-along? Karaoke, which takes up less room than a disc jockey, will come to your home and liven up your party.

"Karaoke is really taking off in home parties," said Jack McCoy, director of The Music Museum, who rent Karaoke and disc jockeys. "We'll do parties as small as 10 people or as large as 450. We'll show you how easy it is to do. Of course, having a few drinks always helps!"

There are 800 songs available on Karaoke, and they range from current hits to country and western and classic Broadway show tunes. The Music Museum also dishes out complimentary copies of your song if you choose to brave it and belt out a tune or two.

"I hear of people bringing the tapes to work the next day and playing it for people," McCoy said with a laugh. "After the party's over, people talk about Karaoke for a long time."

Hot Tubs: What better way to liven up a party than by donning bathing suits, grabbing a few CDs and heading outside in the cold? Into a hot tub, that is. For $450 for the weekend, The Hot Spot's Tub To Go will roll into your driveway.

The 20' x 8', eight-person, $30,000 hot tub comes fully equipped with a remote control television and CD player, rounding out the perfect tools for a perfect party event.

"This gives people more to do at a party, and it's something therapeutic," said Paul Finnegan of The Hot Spot in New Hampshire. "It's a lot more common in the winter. Being outside is what makes it fun - to be out there in a blizzard!"

The Hot Spot will deliver the hot tub for free within a 25-mile radius of their store, but charges $50 for deliveries outside the radius. They also specify that customers only be homeowners and apartment renters.

Finnegan stresses the quality of the product as an explanation. "People are getting more than just a hot tub. They're getting a party vehicle."

Theme Parties: Got a few extra dollars and want to throw a party in Hong Kong? How 'bout the Old West? Why not try a theme party and transform your surroundings without the aid of a time machine. Creative Talent, Inc. will make any theme you dream a reality.

"We take the challenge for events and make it real," said Andy Espo, president of Creative Talent. "If they want to be in the West, I put them in the West, or a ski hut, or a '50s diner. It's great entertainment because it adds an element of fantasy. It allows people to step into another environment without going there."

Creative Talent has over 600 items in their catalog to choose from, which allows you to become as elaborate as your dollars will go. Small parties might cost $600 and under. Larger parties can escalate as high as $60,000.

Espo stresses, however, that he has items for any price range so your party will be a success.

AROUND TOWN

The Improper Bostonian's Eye On The City caught up with James Taylor on location at the filming for his new video "Copperline" on January 10. Taylor and his crew shot around areas of Boston including the Fens and, as seen above, in a South End garage. The nighttime shoot in the Fens was shot at the old Boylston Firehouse under freezing weather conditions, but good old James hung in there. Taylor's new album, New Moon Shine is holding strong on the charts at number 44.

The award-winning musical sensation Les Miserables returns to Boston on February 18 at the Wang Center. "Les Mis" runs through March 1. The show was last in Boston in 1989 and as before, tickets are selling at a phenomenal rate. Press agent Deedee Chereton strongly suggests that "if you're interested in seeing this magnificent production, I'd advise you to get to the box office." Tickets for this winner of eight Tonys are on sale now at The Wang Center Box Office and all Ticketmaster outlets. Prices range from $42.50 to $17.50. Call for performance times at 482-9393.

Chowing Down is highly enjoyable for those who partake in the palate-pleasing samplings of the Cultural Series at The Ritz Carlton Hotel, from now until March 16. Each year, the Ritz plays host to executive chefs from Europe's most fascinating capitals. The series promotes foods, wines, economic breakfasts, speakers' forums, fashion luncheons and brunches a different day each week. Explore the foods of France from January 22 to 26, Dublin from the 27 to February 2, Germany from February 3 to 9 and Rome from the 9 to 16. Call 536-5700 for information and prices.

The Bank of Boston Celebrity Series continues to dazzle as January rolls into February. Hot on the tails of violinist Itzhak Perlman, famed pianist David Norris will "tickle the ivories" at a one time-only show in Jordan Hall at New England Conservatory on January 24. Norris was recently named the first Gilmore Artist by the Irving S. Gilmore International Keyboard Festival. Tickets for the 8pm show are available at the Jordan Hall box-office (536-2412) or through Celebrity charge at 482-2595. Mr. Norris has played in 60 concerts with major orchestras in the U.S., Hungary, Belgium, France and Scotland and should delight anyone who catches this Boston appearance. Tickets prices are $10 and $5.

Following a successful run of The Nutcracker, the Boston Ballet will present an enchanting production of A Midsummer Night's Dream from February 6 to February 16. This classic comedy of mischief and merriment is set to all of the "Incidental Music" written by Felix Mendleson, including passages like Overture, Nocturne, Scherzo and Wedding March. The program will open with George Balanchine's Allegro Brillante. Tickets are currently on sale through TicketMaster and can be ordered by calling 931-2000.

Need a little excitement to liven up your winter months? Why not go visit a volcano or two? At the Museum of Science, that is. Until March 8, the museum will display their Inside Active Volcanoes: Kilauea and Mount St. Helens exhibit. Learn how to live with and even prepare for the potentially destructive forces of volcanoes. See spectacular photo murals of beautiful lava fountains. See models, graphics, videos and computer stations. Even witness a computer linked by telephone to a seismic activity monitor on the island of Hawaii. Admission is $6 for adults, $4.50 for students, seniors, and children 4-14. For more information call 723-2500.

Jim Koch: The #1 Ingredient in Samuel Adams Beer

The year was 1985. The American beer drinker's love affair with lightly flavored pilsners was at its peak, and the only entrepreneurs in the Boston Beer Co.'s Jamaica Plain neighborhood were members of a street gang called the X-Men. What, then, prompted James Koch (pronounced "cook") to walk away from three Harvard degrees, a comfortable office at the prestigious Boston Consulting Group, and a $250,000-a-year salary for the uncertainty of a career making traditional, full-bodied American lager? Koch, founder and president of the Boston Beer Co., maker of Samuel Adams beer, shared this answer and more with the Improper Bostonian during a recent interview at the Blue Wave restaurant in Boston's South End.

by Dan Silver

Koch arrived several minutes late, out of breath and disheveled. He did not look the part of a stately CEO with his slim build and quiet demeanor. He seemed preoccupied, as if he'd been running behind schedule. But once we settled in and ordered a round of 'Sams', his mood changed. He spoke freely about himself, his beer and American business - without regard for the time - and then agreed to a photo session.

Over the course of two meetings, I found Koch to be forthright and good natured. I don't suspect many other CEOs would sit in a beer vat for two hours indulging an audience with mad-scientist faces and pitchers of beer.

Improper Bostonian (IB): So you met my publisher at a bar opening recently?
Koch: Yeah. It was nice of him to come down. I've got a lot of respect for anyone who starts anything from scratch.

IB: It's tough. We started in his basement.
Koch: We didn't have an office for the first six months. We were a three or four million dollar company before we had anything but an answering service. My partner Rhonda (Kallman) and I still share an office. Until two months ago we shared a desk. But my job is making and selling beer, and you can't do either one at a desk.

IB: You refer to yourself as a brewer in some instances and a salesperson in others, but never as president or CEO.
Koch: One of the advantages of having a small company is that you get to do whatever you want. I like to make beer, and I like to talk to people about it. So you see, for me, brewing and sales are intertwined. Making the beer and talking about it go together, and nobody can talk more deeply - either emotionally or technically - than I can.

IB: You've become something of a celebrity pitching Samuel Adams. How do you like the attention?
Koch: My personality is not well suited for publicity photos and interviews. Basically I'm a quiet, introspective person. Certainly, my stronger side likes to make beer. That's a more methodical, rigorous, detail-oriented kind of activity. But as president and brewer, I am the most logical spokesperson.

> "I guess I see myself as an educator and maybe a missionary"

IB: What was it like selling your first case?
Koch: Well, I never thought of myself as a salesperson. I guess I see myself as an educator and maybe a missionary. I deeply believed from day one that when I walked into that first bar with a bottle of Samuel Adams that I was giving somebody the best beer they had ever had - that I was doing them a favor.

The first bar I walked into, I gave it to the manager. He took about three sips, looked at me, and said this is delicious. He told me he wanted to carry the beer. I said great. I knew so little about selling that I walked out of there without even asking for the order. I had to call him back and say, "Gee, you said you wanted to carry my beer. How much do you want?"

IB: Which bar was it? Do you remember?
Koch: Oh sure. It was the Dockside. I was still working at Boston Consulting Group. I walked out of there, turned right on State Street and just went into the first bar I came to. It was just that I walked down State Street, which is ironically where (company namesake) Samuel Adams' brewery was. His brewery was probably 100 yards from my very first customer.

IB: What did you do next? Were you hungry to go out and make your next sale?
Koch: No, I was scared shirtless. It was the scariest thing I ever did leaving the secure, highly paid environment at Boston Consulting Group to walk down the street into a bar and put my future in the hands of a 30-year-old bar manager. I walked out of BCG a well-respected consultant. Fifty yards later I was just another beer salesman.

IB: You mentioned your partner Rhonda. How did you recruit her?
Koch: Rhonda was my secretary at BCG when I was looking for a partner. There were all these hyper-educated Harvard MBAs, and then there was Rhonda, who was as smart as any of them. She had just had a different set of opportunities. She had skills that I didn't have. Rhonda really lights up the place. She's a good people person. She's also energetic, resourceful, and organized.

IB: What did your colleagues at BCG think when you told them you were going to go off and start a microbrewery?
Koch: They shook their heads at that. Most of them thought it had no future. Because if you looked objectively at the beer business, there was no place for an American beer that cost more than imports. It was not something that you could do rationally because there was no market niche. I had to create the niche.

IB: Your family is from the Midwest.
Koch: Yeah, I grew up in Cincinnati.

IB: When did you come to Boston?
Koch: I came here in 1967 when I was 18 years old to go to Harvard. Except for three years in the middle, I've been here ever since.

IB: Tell me about those three years. That was the Outward Bound experience?
Koch: Yeah. Ha! I had just done my first year of business school, and I was a little bit burned out. And, you know, not everybody is privileged enough to do their second year right after their first at Harvard Business. So I was one of those people who got to take a little time in the middle. And I was gone, I guess, for three years to work as a mountaineering instructor for Outward Bound.

IB: Is it true that you applied at the insistence of your drinking buddy?
Koch: That's how I got into it. Outward Bound doesn't hire off a resume. They want somebody who's going to be okay if the shit hits the fan, and you can't tell that from a resume. They want to be able to give you ten live bodies and feel comfortable that you'll bring back ten live bodies. My drinking partner, an Australian guy who had been an Outward Bound instructor for several years, knew a lot of the directors and got me in. He said don't worry, Koch will bring all the bodies back.

IB: What made the experience worthwhile for you?
Koch: You're outdoors. It was a nice office.

IB: You've got an MBA and a law degree from Harvard. Why the joint degree?
Koch: Because I didn't know what I wanted to do. It was in the (consumer advocate) Ralph Nader era when people thought being a lawyer was an act of great public interest. It turned out that most of the people who thought Ralph Nader was a neat guy ended up as corporate lawyers. I realized that too late. As a result, I did go to law school, but I never took the bar and never practiced.

IB: How long did it take you to plan Boston Beer.
Koch: Ha! Somewhere between 150 years and six months. It was six months to figure out what I wanted to do and how I was going to do it. But it was 150 years in terms of fulfilling a destiny. I was in a different circumstance than some guy with an MBA trying to figure out what he wanted to do with his life. Every oldest son in my family since the 1840's has been a brewer here in the United States. I grew up with the idea that I would make beer like my father, my grandfather, my great grandfather, and so on. It was a no-brainer. I was going to make beer.

IB: But I've read that your father's reaction was less than enthusiastic. His response to your announcement was that it had taken 100 years to get the smell of beer out of the Koch family's clothes.
Koch: Yeah, he was very proud: There was finally someone in the family who had gone to college and not just any college - but Harvard. He thought brewing was a waste of an education. For someone who hasn't had those opportunities, a Harvard education isn't something lightly thrown away.

IB: Was there anything other than, as you phrased it, "destiny" that made you want to go into the beer business?
Koch: Well, I was getting a little restless, and there was a lot of travel at BCG. I was gone three or four days every week, year after year. And I was married at the time with two little kids. I thought I would start a small, local business that would keep me around Boston, you know, that couldn't really grow too much. This was originally meant to be a tiny little business, which would make great beer and employ about a half-dozen people.

> "I walked out of Boston Consulting Group a well-respected consultant. Fifty yards later I was just another beer salesman."

IB: I guess you weren't too worried about money.
Koch: No, if I'd been worried about money I would have stayed at BCG. That was a guaranteed road to a nice salary.

IB: If financial rewards aren't important, how do you measure success?
Koch: It happened once seven years ago, and it'll happen again in about 20 years. When I started Boston Beer, I wanted to do two things. I wanted to make the best beer in America, and that happened seven weeks after we started when the Association of Brewers picked Samuel Adams as the best beer in America at the Great American Beer Festival. The next goal was to stand up to the imports and become as big as Heineken in the United States. That is my next goal.

IB: In the past you've mentioned being on the "edge" - pushing your limits. Will the Heineken challenge keep you on the edge?

Koch: Sure. That's a 20-year project. Maybe it's a 30-year project. Maybe I'll get it done, or maybe it'll take my son or daughter. I do believe it's important to set long-term goals. They give you something to get up for every morning. If you don't have a goal that's worth 20 years of your life, you spend 20 years pursuing goals that are worthless.

As we get bigger, every year I want to be able to point to things I did that made the average glass of Samuel Adams in the average beer drinker's hand a better product. Every year I want to improve. It's all in service of an ultimate goal of changing the way American's think about the quality of their own beer. That's worth 20 year of my life.

IB: You've been critical of business schools for not teaching selling and American business for producing poor quality products. Are we getting better on either count?
Koch: I don't think business schools have awakened to the fact that selling is a crucial business skill. They still think of it as something tacky that takes place on used car lots. And that's just not true.

Ultimately, even something high-tech and complicated comes down to providing value to the customer. That's what sales - in its best form - is all about: providing more value to customers than anybody else out there. And that's something that can and should be taught. Most business school faculties are scared shitless of selling. They've never had to deal with it. They got where they are by being the bright kid in the front of the class. But that's no role model for everyone else who's not in the first row with their hands up.

In terms of quality, I think there's been a major change in the phraseology of American business. Everybody talks about quality now; 90% of them have no idea what they mean.

Quality is not a set of words and it's a lot more than a philosophy. It's a specific approach to controlling the process by which goods and services are produced and a way of integrating the customer into that process. People know they've got to have quality, but they don't know what it means or involves.

In America, we're still learning what quality is all about. It's a necessary first step, but there's still a long way to go. I think American management is very intense, and in most cases, very committed. And I think we'll get there. It took the Japanese between 20 and 30 years to get the payoff. I think we can do it in 10 or 15, but we've only recognized the imperatives since the mid-80s. So maybe by the millennium we'll start to see wide-spread substantive results.

IB: How do you feel about the quality of American beer?
Koch: I get frustrated when other microbrewers allow beer to remain on shelves after it's old and stale. Many people have never tasted really good American beer, and they come away thinking these are good beers. My mission is to educate these consumers.

As for Anheuser-Busch and Miller, God love them. I don't personally enjoy the taste, but from a brewing standpoint, they make a good, consistent product. Consumers know what to expect, and that's what quality is really all about. If General Motors could make cars the way Anheuser-Busch makes beer, there would be no Toyotas.

IB: Does your work leave you much time for leisure?
Koch: Something like this is very consuming. I mean if you're going to start a business and have a large vision, you better be willing to pay the price. And the price is, it will eat your life. That explains why people aren't able to do this for mercenary reasons. If you're going to work 70 hours a week for 20 years, you can't do it for something so trivial as money. You've got to do it because you love it.

IB: Is there necessarily a trade-off between doing something you like and making money?
Koch: I don't believe so. People do well financially when they've created a lot of value, and they create a lot of value because they believe in what they're doing. It's hard to make a lot of money doing something you hate, because you won't do it well.

"If you're going to work 70 hours a week for 20 years, you can't do it for something so trivial as money. You've got to do it because you love it."

IB: What do you like to do in Boston?
Koch: Boston has a great bar and restaurant scene. A lot of the bar owners are my customers, so I know them. It's wonderful to be able to come here today to a place like the Blue Wave, which is sort of California trendy, and then tomorrow go to Union Oyster House, where Samuel Adams' wife sat and stitched flags over 200 years ago during the Revolution. Boston is fortunate to have both a tradition and a future. Few places in this country have both. You see it in the bar life and restaurants here.

IB: How about your brewery? I've never been there.
Koch: It's a pilgrimage. You ought to make the pilgrimage.

IB: That's funny, I used to consider Anheuser-Busch in Merrimack a pilgrimage.
Koch: No, that's like going to a Congregational service.

IB: Have you ever had any politicians at your brewery?
Koch: Sure. Bill Weld has been there. Well, he drinks my beer. A lot of politicians do. George Bush even sent me a picture of himself drinking a Samuel Adams.

IB: What about Michael Dukakis?
Koch: Yeah, he's been to the brewery, but we couldn't get him to have a beer. He looked like he could have used one, too. It was about the time we were specially brewing a "Dukakis Draught" for the Democratic convention. The idea got shot down last minute by his campaign manager. Yeah, Dukakis would probably be president today if he were a beer drinker.

TRAVEL

HITTING THE SLOPES AT STRATTON

by Ed Staunton

Nestled in the heart of Vermont's Green Mountains, Stratton offers some of the best skiing in New England. It is the highest and most popular ski area in southern Vermont. What's more, it takes a mere eight minutes in Stratton's' Starship X11 gondola to reach the peak. Once on top (given that conditions are suitable), the skier or snowboarder is presented with a wide variety of terrain. Trails for even the most severe "thrashers" are numerous.

Made For The Beginner and The Expert

Those who would rather play it safe can choose from the more conservative trails. Currently, a total of 40 trails are open at Stratton. Many of the runs lie in the Snow Bowl and Sun Bowl. The Snow Bowl offers challenging terrain including a world-cup mogul field, while the Sun Bowl presents a warmer, less severe side of the mountain. The variety of trails at Stratton make this one of the best areas in New England to ski - especially if you go with a group of friends with mixed skill levels.

The Village

But what makes Stratton Mountain a solid choice for your winter enjoyment is its large mountain village. Several ski shops, boutiques and dining establishments boast their services along a cobblestone walkway with various signs - hand-carved and neon. Such a bombardment of tourist attractions can be overwhelming but when the day is ending and you're beat, you will find the mountain village to be a perfect environment to relax, browse or just pig-out!

Hotels and condo's are plentiful all along the mountain. To book a lodge or room, Stratton offers a Central Reservation Service at 1-800-THE-MTNS. The snowmaking at Stratton is excellent and the recent cold temperatures have enabled the snowmaking operation to run at full capacity. This, of course, is compounded with the recently fallen natural snow.

The Conditions

Presently, Stratton is reporting "machine-packed powder and frozen granular." What does this mean? It means that the conditions aren't on a par with the Swiss Alps but for New England, the conditions are good. This doesn't mean you will not encounter ice and rocks so you should take special care to have sharp skis and reliable bindings. If you are looking to rent equipment, there are plenty of ski shops in and around Stratton Mountain Village which can suit all your skiing needs. We suggest a visit to the Startingate Ski Shop at the base of the Stratton access road. The tune-ups are high quality and their boot fitting operation is perhaps the most high-tech in New England.

If you are planning on skiing more than one day, you may want to look into purchasing a multiple day pass. The price is cheaper and Lord knows we all need to save money. So bundle up, check over all your ski equipment and above all, enjoy yourself this weekend.

Dear Mr. Piccirillo:

I would like to take this opportunity to express my sincere appreciation for your outstanding efforts to ensure that the advertising for our Micro-Beer Promotion was effective.

We found The Improper Bostonian to be a gratifying form of advertising. The service we received from the staff was professional and organized. It is evident that time and effort was given to ensure that the advertisement was placed appropriately.

As a result of advertising with The Improper Bostonian, we have received many curious telephone inquiries from people who seek additional information about the micro-beers and Boodle's. We have noticed an overall increase in the number of patrons in our Boodle's restaurant.

Mr. Piccirillo, thank you again, it was a pleasure to work with The Improper Bostonian. We plan to further our business with you.

Sincerely,

Gregory B. Hargrave

GRAND CANYON- It's Very Deep

by Jason Alexander

By all accounts there is a deep pessimism sweeping over our country. This doubt and lack of purpose is the central topic for Grand Canyon, a new film by Lawrence Kasdan. This story about the interwoven lives of six people is, like Kasdan's The Big Chill, an extraordinarily relevant film. Grand Canyon may have its flaws but it drives home a theme aimed at the dysfunctional American: The machine is broken but not out of commission.

Kevin Kline plays Mack, an affluent attorney exposed to his own mortality when his car breaks down in the most dangerous part of the inner city. Simon (Danny Glover) is the tow truck driver who rescues Mack from his urban nightmare and their lives soon become permanently entwined. The plot centers around their relationship as we witness Mack attempt to rescue Simon's sister from her urban plight and meddle in his romantic pursuits. Mack arranges a date for Simon with a woman who works in his building (Alfre Woodard).

Though this is the central relationship of the film, there is also Mack's wife Claire (Mary McDonnell) who finds the answer to her increasingly empty life by caring for an abandoned baby. Mary-Louise Parker plays Mack's infatuated secretary who struggles with her increasingly powerful feelings for her boss. As if that's not enough, Steve Martin plays a producer who creates violent films and subsequently is forced to deal with being a victim of the type of random attack that his work encourages. All in all, a complicated assembly.

Common to all the characters is both a reason to dread what the world has become and a reason to keep going. There are complaints that "the world doesn't make any sense anymore" and "everything is supposed to be different than what it is." But they continue to struggle out of habit and necessity. Where the characters in The Big Chill were concerned with their own place in the world, those in Grand Canyon talk with extreme, almost unreal perception about the problems in the world around them.

The only noticeable flaw of the film is that there are simply too many subplots. Evidently, Kasdan feels compelled to present many undeveloped perspectives on the problems of our time. Each point of view involves the creation of interesting new characters who, because of their sheer numbers, make it impossible to fully follow, understand and sympathize with each situation.

Otherwise, Kasdan directs with considerable scope and a true feel for the danger that lies beneath the surface of an increasingly dysfunctional city. The helicopters that punctuate the scenes are clearly given menace like some dark, controlling guardian. The choice not to cut footage of Magic Johnson in action for the Lakers carries an added potency about the fragility of our world.

This is a fine ensemble cast with good acting across the board. In particular, Kline and Glover emit a confused vulnerability and quiet confidence that increases the audience's concern for their plight. The fact that the extended plot limits Alfre Woodard's screen time makes the performance even more impressive.

Grand Canyon is a flawed but nonetheless important film. It's a slightly exaggerated but believable presentation of a society that has both lost direction and confidence. Wisely, no answers are suggested but it does hint at some hope. For that alone, Grand Canyon is a must-see.

DEUS ex machina (83 Across) is an artificial or improbable device used to resolve plot difficulties. A RONDEL (100 Across) usually has 14 lines. Mischa ELMAN (121 Across) was a concert violinist; Ziggy Elman (no relation) was a jazz trumpeter. The quote at 3 Down is from "As You Like It." ALLEN Drury (13 Down) won a Pulitzer Prize for his 1959 novel "Advise and Consent." "La MERM" (106 Down) was an epithet of Ethel Merman.

The Hand That Rocks The Cradle Will Put You to Sleep

by Raoul Newman

What's happened to the modern day thriller? Is it too much to ask for a plot that makes unexpected twists and turns and big scares that linger and haunt you well after you've left the cinema? The Hand that Rocks the Cradle may be "the hand that rules" - the film's premise, but it sure won't rock your socks off!

After the untimely death of her husband and loss of her unborn child, Peyton Flanders (the sultry Rebecca De Mornay) plots revenge for her tragedies and seeks a new life. The life she craves, however, seems to belong, irrevocably, to someone else.

That someone else is Clare Bartel, convincingly played by Annabella Sciorra. Clare is a supremely happy modern day woman, enjoying the suburban dream we all aspire to - a blossoming career, two kids and her devoted husband Michael (Matt McCoy). When Clare decides to follow her life-long ambition and build a greenhouse, she agrees to hire a nanny to help her out with her other responsibilities, especially taking care of infant Joe.

Passing herself off as the ideal homemaker, Peyton in no time establishes herself as an essential member of the Bartel family. She quickly becomes everybody's dear, making all wonder how they ever managed without sweet, caring and capable Peyton.

Emma, (the adorable Madeline Zima) Clare's precocious three-year-old daughter, forms a secret pact with Peyton and starts to keep secrets from her mother. Baby Joe begins to act despondent. Faithful Michael starts to notice Peyton's charms; and suddenly, Clare's life is turned upside down. She's unsure of herself, nothing is as it seems and she rapidly loses control of everything she's worked so hard to build.

The most interesting character in the film is Solomon (Ernie Hudson), a slightly retarded big boned Afro-american man sent from The Better Day Society to be the hired handyman and build a fence. Solomon prophetically asks the Bartels: "Do you want your fence to keep people in or to keep people out?" The family sanctuary is sacred, you know.

The underlying theme in this film of the unrecognized savior,(like Jesus) and of the wise fool (like King Lear's Fool), is an overused but good idea. Its execution, however, is far too obvious. When we first meet Solomon, Clare is startled and unnerved by his presence and the music ekes of forboding. Is he going to be the "bad guy"? Solomon is the first to catch on to Peyton's far more sinister agenda and is subsequently and predictably disposed of - we won't tell you how. But not to fear, Solomon will have his chance to act on his wise intuition and prove his loyalty and courage.

Rebecca De Mornay as Peyton Flanders and Annabella Sciorra as Claire Bartel in Hollywood Pictures' suspense thriller "The Hand That Rocks The Cradle.

The Hand That Rocks The Cradle
Hollywood Pictures
Directed by Curtis Hanson
Starring Rebecca De Mornay
Annabella Sciorra
Ernie Hudson
Matt McCoy
Madeline Zima

The main problem with this film is that it is just plain mediocre. It doesn't demand anything of the audience and it doesn't give much in return. The plot is entirely predictable, the violence gratuitous. The Hand that Rocks the Cradle may be worth a scream or two but not a full priced movie ticket. And If you have asthma, you may definitely want to skip this one.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Father of The Bride
"Married to Mediocrity"

Father of the Bride is a frustratingly tame film. This story of wedding chaos is too occupied with Steve Martin's fatherly bond with his engaged daughter to be anything more than another nice film. George Banks (Martin) and his wife Nina (Diane Keaton) have a storybook marriage and the prospective in-laws are not only pleasant but enormously wealthy to boot. This isn't average America. The writing is weak with few genuinely funny lines, relying instead on Steve Martin's charm and facial expressions. Even the addition of Martin Short as Franck Eggelhoffer, the affected wedding planner, can't lift this film into the likes of other Steve Martin classics. J.A.

Meeting Venus
"Passionate Explosions"

Meeting Venus is a very subtle film about the production of Wagner's Tannhauser by a Parisian opera company. With slightly off-center characters, an omnipotent union and Babel-like differences in language, it is richly comic. Meeting Venus addresses the serious issue of passion, not only between people but also of music. Glenn Close is good but misplaced in this otherwise European-dominated cast in which Niels Arestrup shines as the frustrated but consumed conductor. The film drags slightly, but above all is a fine reminder of the beauty, power and passion of music. J.A.

Prince of Tides
"Emotional Tension"

This eagerly-awaited film is a well-acted adaptation of the book with some occasional intensity. However, it lacks scope and the blame can be laid at the feet of director Barbra Streisand. As Tom Wingo (Nick Nolte) probes his traumatic childhood, the film loses its momentum. The love story between Wingo and his psychiatrist (Streisand) appears forced and the chemistry between the two is something for which even a good story can't compensate. However, excellent performances from Kate Nelligan, Blythe Danner, Nolte and George Carlin. make Prince of Tides a moving examination of the extended effects of a chiildhood trauma. The film however, doesn't have the necessary cohesiveness to be memorable. J.A.

Bugsy
"Powerful and Hypnotic"

Bugsy is more than yet another gangster movie. It's a study of power and control as they affected one man, Benjamin "Bugsy" Siegal. Warren Beatty plays Siegal with irresistible confidence as he pursues his vision of a palace in the dustbowl of Las Vegas. He would almost be comical were it not for the awesome rages that erupt without warning. Annette Bening is very good as Bugsy's love interest Virginia Hill, and the supporting cast is highly polished. Barry Levinson directs with timeless flow and the result is a movie that, deservedly, will be mentioned often around Oscar time. J.A.

JFK
"Intellectually Stoned"

Surprise, Surprise! Oliver Stone has made a controversial film. With JFK, Stone has woven elements of the 1967 case presented against Clay Shaw by New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison with his own interpretations. The result is a film that, though extremely powerful and thought provoking, leaves the viewer with a dangerous visual of the events surrounding the assassination of president John F. Kennedy. Stone has created a masterpiece which should encourage further investigation into a case which until today has been closed to the blind eye of America. Kevin Costner is Garrison and is surrounded by a star-studded cast that includes Jack Lemmon, Joe Pesci, Sissy Spacek, Donald Sutherland and Gary Oldman. T.A.S.

VIDEO REVIEWS

By Jason Alexander

The Lavender Hill Mob
1951
Starring Alec Guinness
Classic Video Choice
This is one of the classic comedies of all time, produced in post war England by Ealing Studios. The Lavender Hill Mob stars Alec Guinness as a bank clerk who conspires to steal a million pounds in gold bars. Directed by Charles Crichton, it has a theme similar to his more recent A Fish Called Wanda with the central character breaking out of traditional English limitations. The Lavender Hill Mob is a delicate comedy of manners and situations. Highly amusing, it is well worth renting.

Tapeheads
Starring John Cusak & Tim Robbins
1988
Tapeheads is a film with such complete yet subtle absurdity that proves a joyful diversion to watch. Cusak and Robbins guide their company "Video Aces" from commercials for a chicken and waffles restaurant through to a global Menudo concert. This confused and hectic journey also satirizes music videos and ultra-right wing politicians along the way. Tapeheads revels in low-budget charm and irregular humor, a good choice to rent if you enjoy both.

Thelma and Louise
1991
So much has been written about the sociological overtones of Thelma and Louise that the quality of the film has been overlooked. Ridley Scott has created a film with considerable visual scope, perfectly capturing the feel of the road. Susan Sarrandon and Geena Davis lend some intensity and humor to their characters as they evolve through freedom. This is an important and thought-provoking film that's sure to spark some post-video conversation.

Dying Young
Starring Julia Roberts & Scott Cambell
1991
Just as with Thelma and Louise, there could be social debate about Dying Young. It could be said that Julia Roberts' character relies upon a man dying of cancer (Scott Cambell) to educate and refine her as well as provides a purpose for living. This is simply not that good a film. As a love story it lacks depth and though occasionally moving, Dying Young is thin at its best. How should we say this? Skip it.

ARTS

A Genius at Work

Composition Drawing for "Saint George and the Dragon", Fra Bartolommeo; Italy 1472-1517; Chalk on light gray prepared paper.

by Jannette Tucker

After 300 years of detainment in two large bound books, a selection of over 500 drawings of Florentine painter Fra Bartolommeo's are seeing the light of day. Remarkably, about 1,100 black and white or red chalk drawings have survived, allowing us to study Fra Bartolommeo's working process and thought patterns more closely than that of any other Italian Renaissance artist. Fra Bartolommeo, along with Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael and Michelangelo, was responsible for cultivating the sculptured, deep style of the High Renaissance.

Bartolommeo was the only artist of the four, however, who took great pains to preserve his studio work, which had no commericial value at the time. Those efforts closed that gap left by other Renaissance artists, giving us a roadmap of work to follow to his final painting. We see two versions of Mary Magdaline, floating serenely just above the surface, in two pre- God the Father, Mary Magdaline and Saint Catherine of Siena sketches, in addition to just the final painting, giving us much more insight into the brilliant mind of Fra Bartolommeo.

Fra Bartolommeo: Master Draughtsman of the High Renaissance is on display at the Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., until April 12. Use the West Wing entrance. For more information call 267-9300.*

The 115 drawings on loan from the Museum Boymans-van Beuningen, Rotterdam, debuted at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts on Jan. 15 for the MFA's "Fra Bartolommeo: Master Draughtsman of the High Renaissance," on display until April 12, 1992. The MFA is the first American stop on a tour of the drawings before they head to Europe. After the short European tour, possibly ending in Coppenhagen, the drawings will be "going to bed for a long time," according to Clifford Ackley, MFA curator of prints, drawings and photographs.

The exhibit spans the artist's career, including his pre-Dominican Friar days when he was known as Baccio della Porta. When Baccio became an avid follower of religious reformer Savonarola, he burned all of his drawings on secular subjects in one of Savonarola's "bonfires of the vanities" in Florence in circa 1498. With his entrance into monkery, Baccio then became Fra Bartolommeo, and part of what remains of his extensive collection is what the public is treated to at the MFA.

What the public witnesses at the MFA is nothing short of a special, up-close look at genius in progress. The key is that these drawings were the foundations for works that later became world-renowned paintings. Because the drawings were so brilliantly preserved, 20th century art lovers can witness the detail of the depth - the meticulous attention to the "three-dimensional" that typified the High Renaissance style - paid even to pre-painting sketches.

Through these sketches, we gain insight to the early Bartolommeo thought patterns when he created his masterpiece Vision of Saint Bernard, which hangs in the Uffizi Gallery in Florence. We get a rare opportunity to see the beginning stages of Saint George and the Dragon, a painting commissioned by a wealthy Florentine merchant but which was subsequently destroyed. We see a stream-of-consciousness, early drawing of a rearing horse and an unfinished figure of a man created, as most of his drawings, with black chalk, highlighted with white, on gray prepared paper. So rarely does the public get to peek into the makings of art that this exhibit is entrancing, giving the public the excitement of looking for smudges of chalk, indicating a change of Fra Bartolommeo's mind.

To make the journey of Fra Bartolommeo's creative thought patterns even more vivid, the MFA supplies photographs of the finished product, so the public can actually see the entire creative process. This gives us the feeling that we were lucky enough to have shared in the intimate involvement of the creative process. We don't just see his masterful creations; we're introduced to the mind that created them.

Jackie - O' What a Show!

by Nancy Leonard

Susan Winslow plays the title role in Jackie: An American Life

At the Hasty Pudding Theater in Cambridge, Jackie: An American Life is a quirkily interesting panorama, galloping with comic relish through the life of Jaqueline Bouvier Kennedy Onassis. In 2 hours and 50 minutes (with intermission), playwright-director Gip Hoppe gives us a lively, gimmick-filled evening that's long on incident and short on insight. The biographical cartoon is often amusing, but leaves one wondering about its origin.

Hoppe's piece, which premiered last February at the Academy Playhouse in Orleans on Cape Cod, is being presented here by The Poet's Theater. Yet, the work is grounded far more in our visual than in our literary culture. Jackie's story, stretching from her immigrant forebears to her post-Onassis Doubleday Publishing job, is told in a series of breathless scenes, overflowing with zany depictions and comic absurdity.

Jackie is best early on, when it's more of a commentary on the times. Jackie is torn between her playboy father (whom she adores) and her socially prominent mother, who re-marries into a dull but wealthy Newport family. She finds solace in books, and is one of the few graduates of Miss Porter's finishing school to attend college. Rejecting a subordinate housewife's role, Jackie manages straight A's at Vassar, studies on her own in Paris, and becomes an inquiring photographer. An engagement to a boring stockbroker ends when she meets the intensively handsome and ambitious John Kennedy. One can see the origins of feminism in Jackie's strivings. But aside from casting the Kennedys as self-important upstarts, authorial perspective fades as the evening progresses. When Hoppe is forced to be selective of historical events, the work falters. He breezes through an arduous campaign tour, a brief fling between Jack and Marilyn Monroe and gives us the televised Kennedy -Nixon debate (the weakest sketch of all). The First Lady busies herself with jetsetting, clothing and in a brightly anachronistic spot, the White House restoration project.

We are told in passing that Jackie knows of the infidelities, and is bothered by a lack of privacy in Camelot. After a tastefully-handled death of an infant and the Texas assassination it's on to even greater celebrity status, and a materialistic second marriage. Jackie is adopted by the tabloids, and hawked as their prime product.

Jackie:
An American Life
Through Jan. 26
The Poets' Theatre at the Hasty Pudding
12 Holyoke St., Cambridge
Performances are Tuesdays through Fridays at 8pm.
, Sat.. at 5 and 9 pm,
Sun. at 2pm, and 7pm..
• Tickets are $18 - $28
• For Tickets call TicketPro at 1-800-828-7080 or the Hasty Pudding Box Office at 496-8400

Hoppe's narrative intentions obscure any other dramatic purpose. Despite some satirical swipes, he hasn't written a satire. Nor is this a dramatic essay. The piece says little about the tabloid frenzy surrounding its subject, and leaves the audience to assess the impact of events on Jackie as a person. It touches only superficially upon the passing of the Kennedy era, and provides little insight into the development of myth in modern America. Quite simply, this is a gleeful cartoon, where we see the "what" but seldom the "why".

The action is enlivened by puppets, cardboard cutouts, and theatrical shenanigans of all kinds. Hugh Auchincloss, for example, is a large stuffed puppet, adorned with paper money. Joseph Kennedy is a giant-sized cutout, with a booming voice and sweeping hand. A cardboard Queen Mary, with hovering seagulls, returns Jackie from Paris.

In the frenzy, the live characters become outrageous caricatures. The Kennedys are depicted as a gaggle of sports enthusiasts, with a pregnant Ethel trailing babies from her dress. Truman Capote is captured in a fey lisp. Black-Jack Bouvier is an uncontrollable womanizer. Marilyn Monroe is filled with sultry lust; Christina Onassis, with hot invective.

Susan Winslow impersonates Jackie with wide-eyed restraint and a languorous bearing. There's a passing resemblance, but one wonders if that's really the point. JFK should be taller and a bit more appealing. Kevin Rice, as JFK, looks like a kid subbing in the role. The rest of the cast - Diego Arciniegas, Jeremiah Kissel, Chloe J. Leamon, Jeanne Montano, Richard Snee, and Bobbie Steinbach - is exceptionally versatile and energetic.

The fast-paced Jackie is comically observant - sometimes amusing, sometimes silly - but it could use more purposive insight. But in spite of its shortcomings, Jackie is a good bet for some fun with the Kennedys.

Misalliance

The American Repertory Theatre opened the second production of its thirteenth season on Friday, Jan. 17 with George Bernard Shaw's Misalliance, directed by David Wheeler. Shaw's comedy pokes fun at the efforts of Edwardian parents who want to control of the romantic destinies of their "modern" offspring. Misalliance introduces the dashing Polish aviatrix, Lina Szczepanowska, who literally crash lands into the Tarleton family action. The cast includes Candy Buckley, Thomas Derrah, Alvin Epstein, Jeremy Geidt, Royall Miller, Stephanie Roth, Steven Skybell, Derek Smith and Bronia Stefan Wheeler. Misalliance runs through March 7, in repertory with Chekhov's "The Seagull", which begins previews on Feb. 14. Performances are at the Loeb Drama Center. For information, call the box office at 617-547-8300.

"Pay-What-You-Can" Program

The ART is also continuing its popular "Pay-What-You-Can" ticket program, which makes 50 tickets available for every Saturday matinee performance at whatever price patrons can afford. Tickets go on sale at 10am on the Monday prior to each Saturday matinee performance, and must be purchased in person at the ART box office at 64 Brattle Street in Cambridge. Tickets are limited to two per person and on a first-come, first-served basis. Inquiries can be directed to the box office.

The Speed of Darkness* Hits Town at The Speed of Light

Also in Cambridge, the Nora Theatre Company is currently presenting the Boston-area premiere of The Speed of Darkness by Steve Tesich. The play concerns a Vietnam veteran who seems to be living the American dream with his wife and daughter in the South Dakota suburbs, until an old Army buddy comes to visit. The production is directed by Robert Walsh and features Matt Damon, Dorothy Gallagher, Robert A. Johnson, Barry Magnani and Christiana Nelson. Performances take place in The Theatre at the Union, Quincy and Harvard streets, Cambridge, through Feb. 1. There are no performances early in the week. Call the box office at 617-495-4530 for more information.

The Leisure Study

A what, when, where and how guide for your free time.

Wet All Over!

If someone said you could be diving on a Caribbean reef in March, would you believe them? It's easy to become a certified diver and you don't have to spend hundreds of dollars to be one. Community organizations and dive shops offer training courses that can have you certified by February and exploring the great wonders of the sea. East Coast Divers, a Boston area dive shop, offers courses for beginners through the instructor level. East Coast holds classes in area pools and hosts Caribbean and international diving excursions. Talk about an excellent way to cope with the winter doldrums. Learn a new hobby, meet people and maybe sooner than later, you'll be eye to eye with a Chichen-Itza Grouper. Call East Coast Divers in Brookline, Framingham or Hyannis at 1-800-649-3483 for class times and more information.

Safe Socks

Condom-hiding wallets are becoming a thing of the past. So what's a swinging, young, single guy supposed to do? Super Socks in Boston is now making safe sex possible with their safe socks. Their condom socks have a discreet, little pocket on the side, perfect for those "inspirational" moments. But that's not all this shop has to offer. Pull your head out of the sand and outfit yourself in thigh-high socks with ostrich feathers. Get really cosmic and light up your party with glow-in-the-dark space ship stockings. Super Socks owner Karl Volker said walking into his store is like "grown-ups in a candy store. Some people have fetishes about socks." Who would have thought Lifesavers, newsprint and California license plates could round out the perfect outfit? Super Socks is located at 516 Comm. Ave. in Kenmore Square, 350 Longwood Ave. in Children's Hospital, 10 Winter St. at Downtown Crossing and One Center Plaza at Government Center. Call 247-7092 for information.

Chocolate Bar - A Candyland Feast

How sweet it is! Chocolate lovers have found their Mecca in the Chocolate Bar at the Hotel Meridien, 250 Franklin Street. For $9.50 per person ($6.50 for children), indulge in the all-you-can-eat candyland with such chocolate fantasies as chocolate mint mousse torte, chocolate fondue with strawberries, chocolate pecan pie, chocolate banana torte or white chocolate mousse cake. The Chocolate Bar was inspired by the "gouter," the traditional snack of bread and chocolate feasted on by schoolchildren throughout France. And feast you must! Leave your diet at home and indulge. The Chocolate Bar is open Saturday afternoons from 2:30 to 5:30pm in the hotel's Cafe Fleuri's atrium setting. For more information call 451-1900.

Hawaii in Under Two Hours

The answer to your winter blues may lie within the sun, of all places. Scientific studies have shown that certain states of depression come from a lack of sunlight exposure. Since most folks can't swing a Hawaiian vacation this year, they assume their options are limited to tanning pills. They're dead wrong. You can tan in Boston and it just might be safer. Paula Kelly, co-owner of Tanorama at 226 Newbury Street, says their Tanning huts are safer than the sun. With a breakdown in the ozone layer, people are reevaluating the safety factors of tanning booths and finding some interesting facts. The booths (or huts) at Tanorama emit a controlled amount of UVA rays (the tanning rays) and screen out a majority of UVB radiation. So grab some lotion, head down to Tanorama on Newbury Street and "get rid of them blues." Call 353-0833 for more info.

Fun On The Rocks

Looking for a new way to accomplish outdoor activities without having to brave the cold? Why not go rock climbing - inside? Boston Rock Gym gives you just that opportunity. Scale 4,700 square feet on 16 to 40 foot high walls. Take a class on Saturdays or Sundays from 9am-12pm and learn what the exciting experience of rock climbing is all about. Become familiar with ropes, harnesses, carabiners and footholds. Students will learn how to glide along the walls and how to use the hand and footholds effectively and efficiently with emphasis on using and conserving strength. The cost is $50, equipment included. Then advance outdoors and put those newfound indoor skills to the test in the great outdoors. The Boston Rock Gym is located at 149 Highland Ave. in Somerville. Call 776-8703 for more information.

Fish, Fires and Videotape

If you live in an apartment (like many Bostonians), you may miss having a working fireplace. But just when you thought that your "drab pad" would never improve, here comes a treat. Fox Video Communications offers two strange commentaries of life in the nineties. Instant Aquarium and Instant Fireplace are at your rescue. Fox replaces the labor of creating an in-home aquatic environment or building a fire with individual hour-long videos. Liner notes for the aquarium video boast "No aquarium to clean and no fish to feed." Instant Fireplace is perfect for those cold winter nights. Just "imagine" that it's warm. Ten bucks will get you a copy at Videosmith at 283 Harvard Street in Brookline. Call 232-6637 for more details.

The Real JFK

In wake of the recent furor created by Oliver Stone's controversial JFK, the American public is in the midst of a resurgence of a seemingly insatiable appetite for information about the 35th President of the United States. For JFK memorabilia, facts, exhibits, films, tape recordings, letters, speeches and a host of material, make a trip to the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum at Columbia Point, Dorchester (Behind UMass Boston). The museum portrays the life of JFK and traces his political career and personal interests. Watch the half-hour biographical film John F. Kennedy 1917-1963 produced exclusively for the library. The Library was built with funds donated by millions of people and was given to the United States Government on October 20, 1979. It is part of the National Archives of the United States of America. Call 929-4523 for more information.

"You Have Some Brains Stuck in Your Teeth"

After an unexpected deluge of attention from his fawning fans, our specialty foods critic, Seymour Kaubalz has collected his thoughts and returned to fill you in on the hottest dish in town. Calves Brains, a lá BIBA at 27 Boylston Street is a specialty of Owner/Chef Lydia Shire. Shire first cooked the dish as a guest for the Spanish government and it's the oldest dish on their menu. The brains are currently offered under the Offal (pronounced awful) section of BIBA's menu. Loosely translated, Offal means "underused animal parts."

Shire is modest about their popularity, saying "I once cooked the dish for the Chain des Rotisseurs club and it's hard to believe but 90 people in one room were eating calves brains." Even Seymour raves about them "As adjectives go, 'mouth-watering' does this dish no justice," says Seymour. "When I'm done chewing on the brains, I want to lick the plate. Sometimes I even feel like mooing." Call BIBA at 426-7878 for information and reservations.

THE HUNTINGTON SHINES WITH THE LITTLE FOXES

J. Kenneth Campbell as Ben, Nicholas Hormann as Horace and Linda Gehringer as Regina in the Huntington Theatre Company production of Lillian Hellman's The Little Foxes.

by Rachel Stern

The Huntington Theatre Company's presentation of Lillian Hellman's The Little Foxes is exciting, entertaining theatre. The play eavesdrops on the life of a Southern family at the turn of the century as three of its members try to fenagle from one disinterested sibling-in-law his part of a multi-million dollar investment. Hellman's most popular and somewhat melodramatic play, it is full of rotten scheming people doing audacious and awful things to one another as well as to several long-suffering innocents, at least some of whom get them back in the end.

The Huntington is only 10 years old, and its relative youth is apparent; sometimes pleasantly, sometimes less so. There is an eagerness to please the audience which is very encouraging. It is a welcome change from the elitist brand of theatre which does not allow the audience to understand the work, much less enjoy it.

On the down side, however, there are some amateurish moments. For example, the accents which with one exception, should be uniformly Deep South, range instead from Northern to Texan to non-existent.

The sets, designed to by Linda Buchanan, are simple, yet contribute brilliantly to the ambience and message of the play. The costumes and lighting by Linda Davis and Rita Pietraszek are effective in that they are appropriate but do not draw attention to themselves.

Kyle Donnelly's direction is skillful yet unobtrusive. Her deft blocking of scenes illustrates the far-reaching consequences of the actions of this single family whom we see only in one isolated room. The use of music, in the last act especially, is economical yet dramatic.

The cast is led by Linda Gehringer as Regina Giddens, J. Kenneth Campbell as her brother Ben Hubbard, and the very strong Nicholas Hormann as Horace Giddens. As the unfortunate Birdie, Laurie Kennedy almost steals the show in a dynamic display of humor, cynicism and pathos that opens the third act.

Ms. Hellman's characters speak a warning chillingly appropriate to our times: "There are people who eat the earth. . . and other people who stand around and watch them do it." The Little Foxes runs through Feb. 2 at the Boston University Theatre at 264 Huntington Ave. Tickets and information at 266-0800..

MUSIC

The Vouts-Elvis Costello Meets the Ventures

The Vouts and self proclaimed whiffleball connoisseurs: Garret Vandermolen, Glenn Dicker, Michael Dunford and Tor Hansen

by Jannette Tucker

Mind-numbing, hemorrhoid-bursting, guitar edge with a little bit of chunckle ear candy." That's how the Boston-based Vouts describe their music. Who wouldn't prick up their ears and take a little notice after that dictum from these self-proclaimed whiffleball champions?

Hemorrhoid analogist and drummer Michael Dunford expanded on The Vouts' sound on a more serious note before a recent gig at T.T. the Bears. "It's definitely created to get you moving," he said. "It sounds like a flashback to the Eighties to say that it's dance oriented, but it's almost that with a Sixties sound."

Just pop into one of their shows at The Rathskeller or Bunratty's and you'll quickly realize this ain't no disco. On stage, The Vouts - guitarists/vocalists Tor Hansen and Glenn Dicker, bassist Garret Vandermolen, and Dunford - shed the sweat pants and Bruins caps and don coats and ties a la The Beatles. And then watch them go nuts, with Dicker and Hansen belting out their dual vocals. That's pure fun to be had.

"Our audience is people who like to dance," Hansen said. "People have a good time at a Vouts show. It's pop with total energy."

Energy is not something these four musicians lack. In a year and a half, they started a band, recorded a tape, christened their own Upstart Records, Inc. and released the CD out with a V. And they just bought a 1981 blue Ford van after being confined to two compact cars. Life is good.

"Going out of town has always been a priority for the band," Dicker said, emphasizing the significance of van transportation. "We want to go the next step and play more out of town. There's only so much you can do in Boston."

They've already accomplished so much. They play on a regular basis throughout Boston, and out with a V is getting radio airplay. They are already spilling out of Boston, having been well received in the live market in Maryland, Maine, Washington, D.C. and New York. Their wanderlust instincts are now pointing them in a different, warmer direction: Austin, Texas, hopefully by the Spring.

"That place is just so diverse," Dunford said as their reasons for targeting the town that spawned Stevie Ray Vaughn. "It's open to anything from punk bluegrass to anything you could name."

This newfound need to play for fresh audiences comes as a result of nationwide airplay of out with a V, which was sent to over 250 college radio stations by The Vouts. They have yet to seek a solicitor to do their dirty work. To date, Rounder Distribution is the only outside organization with a helping hand in promoting The Vouts'. Band manager Tina Hopkins, who writes the band's newsletter and calls about radio promotions, is also instrumental in their promotional work. And that's the key: letting out of the bag what vouting is all about.

Come to think of it, what exactly is vouting?

"The Vouts came from 1940s lingo," Hansen explained. "This guy, Slim Gaillard, a jazz guitarist, invented a language called vout. It was a groovy, jivy kind of talk. So we took the name because he was a lot of fun, and we don't take ourselves too seriously."

The band is the result of a fusion between two separate ventures, Dunford's Stewart Factory and Hansen's, Dicker's and Vandermolen's Skeptic's Bookshelf. Dunford began losing interest in Stewart Factory, and Dicker said Skeptic's Bookshelf, although there are no hard feelings, "just wasn't right." And since all four men agree on whiffleball (which is the cited link of the band), and Dunford had a Field of Dreams whiffleball field , complete with his very own Green Monster, in his back yard, was there ever a question they would click?

The band is hesitant to compare their music to the likes of any heavy hitters, but alas, comparison is human nature so compare we must. They've been likened to such groups as The Romantics ("that was a good one," Hansen said with a grin), a hard-edged Beatles (life could be worse), and an Elvis Costello meets the Ventures. Obligatory comparisons aside, The Vouts are indeed fresh and - surprise, surprise! - unique and original. The dual vocals of Dicker and Hansen add a fresh dimension to a dulling music scene, especially considering that each easily has the vocal capabilities to carry the responsibility alone. And other than the live stage antics, such as taking out panels of ceiling with a guitar, what you see live is what you hear on a recording.

"If you can't do live what you do in the studio, what's the point?" Vandermolen asked.

The Vouts' immediate goal is to head south, hopefully in time for Austin's music festival in the Spring. The long-term goal, however, remains the same as that of any band: get signed to a major label and hit the road. And make money. Lots of money.

Although these are admirable goals, their other goals are more altruistic at a second glance. Although they obviously wouldn't be adverse to getting signed The Vouts would like to maintain Upstart Records.

"It would be fun to put other bands on the label," Dunford said, but added, "we just want to get to the point where we control the project."

The Vouts do, however, control their project. They've done absolutely everything by themselves so far, and are appropriately proud of those accomplishments.

"You can do a whole hell of a lot on your own," Dicker said. "We put everything we have into this band. That's why we're all so poor! But it would be great to get signed. I don't want to sound cocky, but I think it's very possible that it will happen."

On the chance that it doesn't, however, success for these men doesn't hinge on a record deal.

"Live and play," Hansen said of success. "Basically, success is that I still like what I'm doing and somehow keep doing it."

"My goal is to see the country playing in this band," Dunford said. "It would be a blast to play everywhere and just show up and play. I want it to be a mind-numbing, hemorrhoid-bursting experience." That's not too much to ask, is it?

THE CHANNEL'S DEMISE

by Rey Roldan

The Channel stands vacant and quiet, a shadow of its former self. One could almost imagine tumbleweeds rolling across the inactive parking lot. On the marquee, phrases that once hailed the arrival of an upcoming band that will never come are rendered unintelligible by fallen letters. And a handwritten letter to the postman hangs listless, flapping in the wind.

Just a few weeks ago, Boston's largest rock club closed its doors for probably the last time, the day before what could have been one of the biggest shows in its history - New Year's Eve with the Cramps. The Channel's closing was the result of a split between its current owners and Fannin Street Enterprises, its current operators. Although many people are speaking of the Channel in the past tense, there is still talk of a future reopening. But for now, it seems this 1,500-capacity club shall remain in its present condition - closed, chained and bolted - for a long time.

This closing signals the end of a certain era of Boston live music. To some, it came as a complete surprise. But to many, news of the Channel's close was heralded by several years of rumors. "I heard all the rumors that they were having trouble for two years, but I guess you get jaded," said Bim Skala Bim saxophonist John Cameron. continued on following page

by Thomas M. Ullman, Jr.

Ronnie Earl Blues Special Scullers, Guest Quarters Suite Hotel
Thursday, Jan. 9, 1992

It was the end of a cold, wet, gray Thursday in January. It was the kind of weather that seemed to leave you soaked through to the soul. It was an evening made for the blues, but something more was needed, something "special". That something was provided by Ronnie Earls Blues Special at Scullers at the Guest Quarters Suite Hotel.

Ronnie is a performer who likes to get close to the audience - as close as the cord on his Fender guitar will allow. He spent most of the show on the edge of the stage but made several forays into the crowd, carefully threading his way through the chairs. It was an excellent chance to watch a bluesman at work. Ronnie withheld his energy, caressing the notes longingly and lovingly - broken occasionally by the flurry of a riff. Only back on stage did the full power explode with Ronnie resuming his attack on the music.

Several times, he gave the spotlight to pianist Dave Maxwell, who ably provided strong solos. At one point, Ronnie and bassist Rod Carey left the stage to allow Maxwell and drummer Terry Harnon to take the "Honky Tonk Train" for a ride; an exciting trip!

At the beginning of the show, Ronnie observed that, since they were playing in what is known as a Jazz room, he would offer a little of that, too. He performed Wes Montgomery's "O.T.D." and John Coltrane's "Equinox." The latter sounded the better of the two. Ronnie was restrained but filled the tune with a spirited mystery. "O.T.D." seemed almost overwhelmed. I couldn't tell if it was Ronnie's approach or the solid-bodied Fender.

By his own admission, Ronnie uses no playlist; he calls them on the spot and likes to do his own tunes. I can safely say it was a good time that warmed the soul. In the end, that is what it's all about.

Greg Greenway, who was selected as a finalist in the Great Woods Songwriter Contest of 1991, just released his much-awaited debut album A Road Worth Walking Down. He was invited by the Chinese Cultural Institute to perform his Tiananmen Square-inspired "Without A Prayer" at a benefit concert on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. Greenway, a native of Richmond, Virginia, writes songs about subjects ranging from Nelson Mandela to death redefining life, from weddings to driving in Boston.

Hilmar Shmundt

"It's like crying wolf. The more you hear, 'It's closing! It's closing!' the more you look at it and say, 'No, it hasn't closed yet.'"

Besides the problems that closed it down recently, some believe other problems were the root of its failure. "It always seemed too big and not enough people showed up for the shows except when some popular band played there," said Rex of the late, semi-seminal local band the Raging Lemmings. "It didn't have the intimate setting that the Paradise or T.T.'s had. There could be 150 people at a show and the place would still look empty. But one of its biggest problems was that it didn't book bands according to how good they sounded. Instead, you had to prove that you could attract at least a hundred people to your show before they let you play a Tuesday."

Heretix's Brian Hill has bitter feelings about the club. "As a band, I didn't like it," he said. "It was the type of place that was willing to cheat local bands and it always seemed like shitty people ran it. We never got the extra money that you're supposed to get when you sell the place out. And it seemed like the house sound guy was always on drugs. But it was nice to have a club that was outside Don Law Booking or the regular Landsdowne sort of thing."

Others see the Channel in a different light. "It seems that there's a diminishing number of clubs for bands to play and the Channel was one of the biggest places," replied Cameron. "We always had a great time there. It took a while [to get a gig], but I guess that's always the politics of the large clubs that book national acts when you're in a small local band."

Bim Skala Bim, which has been a veteran of the Channel scene for the last few years, has also been one of the most lucrative repeat acts in the club's history. "There were a lot of fun shows that we played there, [such as] early shows opening up for Bad Manners five years ago," Cameron continued. "They always brought in a lot of really good Reggae music like Black Uhuru and Steel Pulse, and I have to say that was really great of them."

Dickie Barrett is hot and cold on the subject. "Now that it's closed, I still have mixed feelings about it. It was a big place and it was an alternative to the Paradise that we could play. But, I like the Paradise better because it's cleaner. It doesn't get our suits dirty, especially the dirt sludge, Channel Mud, that was on the floors."

Besides the grungy atmosphere, Barrett sees the whole personal experience from two different viewpoints. "They treated [the band] really well," he mused. "[The bouncers] would really take care of you and get you all the beer you wanted. As a band, I can say that I have no complaints about the way they treated us. But as a fan," he laughed, "I can still remember them opening the back door with my head a few times. I have fond memories of the place and my share of fond nightmares too."

As the Channel ends its story at Chapter 11: Bankrupcy, the question still remains whether or not there will be a sequel. With the recession putting a major squeeze on the recording industry and concert tours floundering, the larger concert halls are among the worst hit victims. So the lights are still out at the Channel. The marquee still predicts its upcoming line-up in some alien gibberish. But the padlocks and chains remain on the doors, waiting for some activity within. Maybe the owners will help Dickie Barrett find a market for Channel Mud.

THE MOVABLE FEAST

EASTERN PIER
SEAFOOD RESTAURANT

by Al Stankus

Dining in Chinatown comes with an inherent flair. Until recently it was also the only place where one could sample a wide array of authentic Hong Kong-style seafood creations.

However, this one-spot phenomena has changed with the opening of Eastern Pier Seafood Restaurant.

Rumored to be under the same ownership of the renowned Chau Chow Seafood House, Eastern Pier, directly across from Jimmy's Harborside, in looks is a far cry from the cramped, dull and overlit Chau Chow. Done up in shades of aqua (maybe to put you in a sea mood), floored with a striking carpet, there's a stylish look to the room.

Playing on this feel, the menu has a page listing drinks like the Zombie, Fog Cutter, and Suffering Bastard. The tables are set with knives and forks and cloth napkins, and the voluminous menu can scare you off with its chop sueys and chicken fingers. But after a few visits, there's no denying that these dishes are just window dressing to subdue the "gweilohs" the Chinese word that idiomatically translates to "boring Western eater."

Skip past the fried rices and boneless ribs to the house specialties, seafood selections, sizzling platters, and a glance to the specials listed behind the cash register. Because what you'll be feted to is a bevy of stylishly-prepared Chinese seafood in which each dish throws off magnificent flavors.

The Siu Mai Shrimp ($4.95) were nine golf-ball sized dumplings bursting with ground shrimp. The thinly-skinned dumplings appeared to be first steamed and then given a quick deep fry.

This same deft touch with stuffing rice wrappers manifested itself in the won ton soup ($1.95), a bowl whose rich Chicken broth might cure the common cold. Once again the dumplings, this time a pork and shrimp combination, were an airy delicacy.

This is a restaurant that obviously loves garlic and onions. The former are minced and generously used in mounds of various fresh vegetables. Adhering to the less is more style of cooking are such simple but superb dishes as stir fried watercress ($5.95), sauteed pea pod stems ($8.95), and stir fried spinach ($5.95), each of which is infused with tiny bits of fresh garlic.

Melanie Dunea

Eastern Pier owner David Luu

In a prime example of the Hong Kong style which borrows readily from Europe and Singapore cookery, a twist is given to the usual black bean sauce. Eastern Pier's chefs first saute up a rather large quantity of onions, a few hot peppers, and then add the fermented beans to the mix. This rich, sweet and tangy sauce can be served atop littleneck clams ($9.95), a sauteed lobster (seasonal, $11.95), or hard shell crabs ($8.95).

However , note that with the latter, the menu incorrectly identified them as "stone crabs" the meaty claws from the indigenous Florida species and not the hard-shelled and meat stingy New England version. While there's plenty of taste, picking out the crab can become tiresome unless the dish is ordered by a large party.

The grey sole house special (seasonal, $17.95) is a visual treat that gives way to a very interesting dish. A large sole is first steamed, and the fish from the more "meaty side" removed. The thinner bottom side of the fish is deep-fried, bones and all. Reassembled with the crispy flesh and bones on the bottom, the chunks of steamed fish and a slew of at least six kinds of mixed vegetables tossed in a thick sauce are then set out over the large fish.

Other worthy dishes are the Chow Mai Singapore Style ($5.95), thin noodles with a mix of pork and tofu dressed with a slightly spicy dry curry; the sizzling squid ($8.95) and sizzling seafood platters ($9.85), both of which are served on hot platters, as well as the crispy squid ($7.95) served with a beguiling salt and pepper dipping sauce.

When the food is joined to the setting, attentive service, and relative parking ease, Eastern Pier has a step up on the Chinatown competition that once held a monopoly on seafood cookery.

BUDGET BITES

I Dream of Jeannie

by Meg Worden & Peter McNamara

When we started writing this column, our goal was to seek out nice restaurants where budget minded readers could have a good dinner without having to first take out a mortgage. Just when we thought we were succeeding, our well ran dry at I Dream of Jeannie, a pleasant restaurant with low prices and one major flaw - the food.

When we first heard about this new restaurant, we were impressed by the low prices: most entrees are under $10.00 and all come with soup and salad. The menu seemed promising, too, with several interesting-sounding Italian and Greek dishes. Our first meal was somewhat less than memorable, but we charitably attributed it to teething problems, and to be as fair as possible, scheduled a return visit. Two visits later, we wished we hadn't bothered.

The first disappointment was the decor. Somehow the restaurant name had led us to expect an eastern theme with a cozy intimate atmosphere. Instead, the high ceilinged, white walled dining room reminded us of an institutional food hall. The tables were large and well spaced, and we liked the modern prints on the walls, but somehow I Dream of Jeannie lacked an identity.

Turning to the food, the execution of many dishes (especially the sauces) was flawed, and some of the flavor combinations were completely misguided. Appetizers we sampled included butter laden garlic bread ($1.95) - the garlic tasted bottled; greasy overcooked batter fried chicken fingers ($3.95) with a sweet and sour sauce that couldn't mask their taste and Calamari a la Jeannie ($4.45) described as "squid sauteed in a wine, butter and pepper sauce." The squid was dipped in the ubiquitous batter (by now, we were beginning to detect a theme) and was cooked very nicely, but completely ruined by the sauce.

Chicken Frangelico ($8.95) is a so-called specialty of the chef, but doesn't appear on the menu and must be a special request. Shrimp Scampi ($8.95), normally a very garlicky dish, was four large overcooked tasteless shrimp served over pasta, with no evident garlic. Most dishes came with a choice of pasta or potato and vegetable of the day. The pasta was some nicely cooked ziti in a quite good, spicy tomato sauce. Too bad the tomato sauce didn't complement any of the dishes we ordered.

The unlimited soup and salad bar didn't turn out to be such a bargain either. The soups were too watered down to be palatable, and the salad bar on each occasion was an uninspired display of your basic vegetables. We have to admit, however, that we liked the parmesan peppercorn dressing, which had the added virtue of masking the flavor of everything on our plate.

Dessert time. On what we sincerely hope was our last visit, we tried all of the courses. We opted for the chocolate thunder cake, and were served one of the world's smallest slices. It was a good, moist chocolate cake with two layers of a fairly unpleasant chocolate mousse filling. We attempted to order an additional dessert unhelpfully described by our waitress as "a Greek thing"but it was unavailable.

Service under these circumstances would have to be out of this world to compensate for the food, but it didn't come close. On the positive side, our orders were taken and delivered promptly. But any requests for more information led to standard responses like "I don't know", "I'm not sure", or "I'll have to ask". We thought our waitress was new, since she knew so little, but questioning revealed she'd been on the staff since the restaurant opened. This epitomized their entire operation.

With experiences like these, we won't be dreaming of Jeannie - our reruns were as bad as the first showing. Maybe we'll come back when there's a real genie in the kitchen.

I Dream of Jeannie is located at 312 Stuart St. in Boston. Tel 338-7338. All major credit cards accepted.

Appeteasers

by Marge Chryssostomidis & Peter McNamara

What better way to forget the winter blues than to go to one more party? January 19 is the 20th anniversary of the Averof, and of course there will be a special celebration that evening. A multi-course dinner is planned for $15.00 per person, featuring hors d'oeuvres, shish kebab and assorted pastries. The festivities continue on January 28 at the Search for Alexander the Great buffet dinner, where for $15.00 you can feast on epicurean delights ranging from calamari to roast suckling pig. For reservations, call 354-4500; the Averof is at 1924 Mass. Ave., Cambridge.

Rare Vintage

If you act quickly, you may just be in time to seize a rare opportunity to enjoy some of those magnificent but fast disappearing 1961 Bordeaux wines. A very limited number of seats is available at Paolo DiBenedetti's Old Bordeaux Tasting on January 19. Wines he hopes to have on hand include Chateau Lafite '61, Chateau Latour '61, Cheval Blanc '66 and La Mission Haut Brion '66; the accompanying dinner will be a carefully designed meld of French and Italian dishes. The cost is $250.00 per person, and the location is Paolo, at 216 Hanover Street, Boston, tel. 227-5550. Paolo has other wonderful wines in his cellar, and hopes to have regular Sunday evening tasting dinners. Frequency will depend upon demand, so be sure to call him if you are interested.

Italy on the Vine

Rocco's will feature six to eight wines from the Italian Piedmont region for a January 20 tasting and dinner. Examples of Barbera and Barolo will of course be included, and the set dinner accompanying the wines will consist of Piedmontese dishes. The price is $45.00 per person; call 723-6800 for reservations.

A California Feast

Il Capriccio at 53 Prospect Street, Waltham will be showcasing some very special California wines on January 23. A tasting dinner will feature the wines produced by Jim Clenenden of Au Bon Climat and Bob Linquist of Qupe Wines. The menu will include lobster, duck ravioli, venison and dessert crepes. The cost per person is $65.00

A Taste of Winter

The winter series of wine tasting dinners is already under way at Cornucopia (15 West Street, Boston, tel. 338-4600), the next being scheduled for January 29. For $20.00 you can try five or six different Chianti Classicos paired with a couple of tasting portions of winter food; Four more winter tastings are planned. Expect to see Scandinavian, Nova Scotian, Russian and Celtic food on the menu.

Cooking for Love

Michela's, at 1 Athenaeum Street, Cambridge, will be starting Saturday morning classes on February 1 with Cooking For Love, a 5 course meal to make for your Valentine. The class runs from 11:00am-1:00pm and costs $40.00. And at Michela's Take Out shop, look for the new canvas bread bag priced at $8.50; it is perfect for carrying Michela's long loaves of Tuscan bread! It makes a great gift when filled with goodies. The staff at Michela's can put together a selection for you. For information, call Esti or Dara at 225-2121.

Show us Your Wares

Having a hard time finding the right kitchen equipment? Looking for inexpensive china and glassware? Search no more and head for Silver Restaurant Supply at 100 Pearl Street, Chelsea, tel. 884-8700 (one block from Chelsea Square) where owner Michael Solomon recently opened up his store to the general public. Among the things you'll find here are professional cookware, cooking utensils, silverware, and (soon) heavy duty electricals like mixers and food processors. Most items are priced 30-50% lower than regular retail. Hours are 8:00am-5:00pm Mon-Fri and 9:00-3:00 Sat; no credit cards accepted.

A Side Order of Mozart

It's always fun to be entertained while you have dinner, and even nicer when there's no cover charge. At Frank's Steak House, 2310 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, tel. 661-0666, popular pianist John Mansfield performs every Wednesday, while various different musicians provide guitar music and vocals on Friday and Saturday evenings from 8:30pm-12:30am. Also choose from several dinner specials priced under $9.00

In The Realm of the Spirits

WINTER WARMERS

by Al Stankus

Generally stronger and darker than traditional beers and ales, spiced ales or extra-special bitters brewed in late December have remained part of a storied northern European tradition. These winter warmers are but part of a legacy that produces Octoberfest brews, wheat beers, fruity lambics and bocks - all beers that are seasonally-dictated.

Recently, we sampled some of these winter brews. Following is one man's tasting notes on "the beers of winter.":

Young's Winter Ale: There was little evidence of the bitter flavor that one comes to expect from this esteemed British brewer. Overall, the Young's wasn't that interesting, having a small head, dull finish and a rough taste throughout.

Sierra Nevada Celebration Ale: A creamy, very rich brew, that's markedly different from their regular beer and ale. The head was huge and the finish was bitter in the good sense of the word. While there was depth, the Sierra Nevada gave no hints of spices being mixed into the batch.

Our Special Ale, 1991; from Anchor team Brewing Company: This San Francisco microbrew pioneer put out another winner in 1991. Although not as remarkable as their exotic 1990 brew (look around, some are still available), it's marked by a creamy richness similar to the Sierra Nevada. There are also tastes of nutmeg and cinnamon, but rather than hitting the buds on the first sip, the tastes perk up on the finish.

Grant's Spiced Ale: A slightly cloying brew that was thick and threw off plenty of nutmeg and cinnamon tastes right from the outset. Although an American brew (from Washington State), its lack of effervescence indicated a brewmaster in touch with the British way of making beer.

Catamount Christmas Ale: Despite an ugly Christmas tree on its label, this was our favorite. There was a stout-like cream from the pour, and just the right hint of spice to this hoppy, pleasantly bitter brew. Like all good brews, when it warmed up in the glass, the Catamount became even creamier and threw off different taste nuances.

Samuel Adams Winter Lager - Special Brew: Very similar in style to their regular offering. No great surprise as was the case with their dandy, nicely bitter Octoberfest. In truth, Sam Adams' regular ale tastes better, as this brew was kind of clunky and bitter, without the body to back the bitterness.

Coors Winterfest: One pour and it was "Adolf, we hardly knew ya." Nothing like the crisp, clean Colorado "Kool Aid" that makes Coors a decent summer gulper. Thinner than the others, there's no doubt this one is aimed at the American palate. Still it was rather creamy; but like most American beers, tasted best when very cold.

Harpoon Winter Warmer: This is definitely beer with spices added. Either you'll love it or hate it - we chose the latter. Imagine pumpkin pie in a bottle or beer-studded eggnog and you'll get the picture. Yet for those who like the edge and the exotic, Harpoon's Winter Warmer attracts raving disciples.

One note: the Sunset Grill and Tap (130 Brighton Ave., Allston; 254-1331) will be holding a tasting of over 20 different winter beers on both January 13 and 20. Cost: $25. Call for more info.

The Improper Bostonian's Restaurant Listings

Addis Red Sea Ethiopian Restaurant
If you feel like broadening your dining experience venture to Addis' cozy basement quarters nestled in the South End. Sit on low seats around the mesob, an intricate straw table on which the meal is served. Drink a bottle of tej, Ethiopian honey wine, and eat with your hands,- using injera, a tasteless, white spongy bread, to scoop up "yummy" dishes of vegetables, and chicken or lamb seasoned with spices such as curry and turmeric. Open daily. Reservations accepted. Closed Tue.

India Samraat
51A Massachusetts Ave., Boston
247-0718
Stroll into this genuine Indian restaurant and sample some chicken tikka masala, a favorite of their regulars. Service is excellent in this exposed-brick interior and Indian paintings adorn the walls. Try another popular specialty dish, the non-vegetarian Thali. Samraat also offers take out and delivery but it's best if you plan to dine on premise.

Acapulco
266 Newbury St., Boston
247-9126
Looking for a quiet place to escape the throngs of shoppers, tourists and lookers on Newbury Street? Take a walk down the stairs into the easily missed entrance of Acapulco. They feature a variety of authentic fajitas, enchiladas, and much more. The atmosphere is relaxing, modest and a break from the many fast-paced Southwestern restaurants in town. Dishes range from $6 to $12. Open Sunday through Thursday, noon to 9:30 p.m., Friday and Saturday until 10:30 p.m.

The Averof
A, D, MC, V
Travel to Greece and dine on delectable lamb, beef, chicken and seafood dishes. Though lamb seems to be the specialty here, you wouldn't be disappointed if you tried the grilled vegetable kabob. Sink your teeth into the spanokopita (spinach cheese pie) if you're really hungry. Open Mon-Wed.. 11-1am, Thur.-Sat., 11-2am. Sunday brunch 11:30am-5pm.

BIBA
272 Boylston St,. Bos. 426-7878 D,MC,V
Overlooking the Boston Common, this mod newcomer to Boston's best offers outstanding service, chic colorful decor and an eclectic menu. Where else can you sample offal (innards) and venison cooked to perfection flavored with figs? Chef Lydia Shire offers delectables such as saddle of rabbit, dark roasted in honey and fresh juniper. Specials vary daily. Dining at BIBA is pricey but worth its weight in culinary nostalgia. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Sat., dinner only. Huge bar crowd downstairs. Call ahead for reservations.

The Black Goose
21 Beacon St., Bos. 720-4500 A,MC,V,D

Reservations are recommended on weekends.

Casa Portugal
1200 Cambridge St., Camb. 491-8880
A,MC,V $
If you're in the mood for intimate yet humble dining and wish you were miles away on the sands of Portugal, you'll love this cozy and inexpensive restaurant. Relish in traditional Portuguese tastes and fragrances; carne de porco a alentejana (pork marinated with clams in a spicy sauce) and mariscada (1/2 a lobster, shrimp, mussels, clams and squid served in a pot like a bouillabaisse). Open 7 days for dinner.

Casa Romero
30 Gloucester St., Bos. 536-4341 MC,V
Muy Romantico! Just off Newbury St., you can find creative Mexican food in a Mexican colonial setting. You'll feel immediately at ease as you let your stress go over reputedly the best margaritas in town. Chef Mendoza does an outstanding job with specialties such as puerco adobado (tenderloin of pork with smoked peppers and oranges). Catch the early bird special (5-7pm) and pay $15 for an appetizer, entrée, dessert and Mexican coffee. Open 7 days for dinner.

Chau Chow Seafood Restaurant
52 Beech St., Chinatown, Bos. 426-6266
A no-frills joint for great chow in the heart of Chinatown. It's no surprise Chau Chow is always crowded for lunch and dinner. It's even packed late night at 4am. Choose from a menu that is so extensive it's daunting. Excellent stir-fry and steamed dishes, crisp and fresh. Noodles, pork, shrimp, chicken, vegetables, duck, beef, tofu - you'll have to make it a regular fix-stop to sample all the plates!

Christo's
782 Crescent St., Rte 27, Brockton
(508)588-4200
Do you have a fetish for feta? An obsession for olives? Jump into the auto and cruise down Rt. 27 South to Brockton where you'll find Christo's, "Home of the Greek Salad King" and enjoy homestyle cuisine of restauranteur Christos Tsaganis. Try the succulent lamb Shish-Kebab for a fantastic price of $9.25. It includes rice pilaf, vegetables and of course, Christo's famous Greek salad. Other offerings range from steaks and seafood to pizza and sandwiches. Their combination of generous portions, hospitable staff and low prices have for years blessed Christo's with a loyal clientele.

Cornucopia
15 West St., Bos. 338-4600 A,D,MC,V

Bad or, The Dumbing of America written by Paul Fussell

Summit Books $19

Have you ever agreed with someone's argument but felt uncomfortable being on that person's side? Felt your head and heart tug in opposite directions? Paul Fussell's novel, Bad or, The Dumbing of America, elicits this response.

An English professor at the University of Pennsylvania and author of numerous books on literature and culture, Fussell argues that nearly everyone and everything in the United States has become "BAD." BAD, he explains is different from "bad": "BAD . . . is something phony, clumsy, witless, untalented, vacant, or boring that many Americans can be persuaded is genuine, graceful, bright, or fascinating. "For a thing to be really BAD, it must exhibit elements of the pretentious, the overwrought, or the fraudulent."

Fussell ranges widely through high and low culture in an alphabetically arranged catalogue of thirty topics, from advertising, architecture, food, movies and poetry - to television. With intelligence and good taste, he paints a depressing and convincing picture of a society severely lacking in both but using self-congratulation to hide its deficiencies; the better to permit its citizens to market their shoddy goods, services and ideas to each other.

You've probably noticed some, even most, of these things before. It would be impossible not to have stumbled upon tabloid television or waiters who want to be your friend. Fussell compiles all the obvious examples, adds some subtler ones and shows in each case who's fooling whom. It's all done with erudite bitchiness that's very entertaining.

BADness is often achieved by language alone, he says, such as the realtors' habit of substituting "home" for "house" in the hopes of giving "their commodity a warm, snugly association . . . Soon we are sure to hear of Whorehomes, bawdyhomes, homes of prostitution, and the like."

While maintaining a high level of elucidating intensity throughout, Fussell manages to avoid the obvious pitfalls of curmudgeonism. Instead of hating absolutely everything, he indicates a few things which " . . . range from good to VERY GOOD, like the American open borders . . . "and the First Amendment (lucky for him).

Nor does he express a knee-jerk preference for the Good Old Days. He finds that most of the Beatles' and Simon and Garfunkel's music is better written than the music of Sir Edward Elgar and labels Ravel's Bolero, "Music to Copulate By."

So with all this wit and insight in store, why not just sit back and enjoy it?

Firstly, Fussell's know-it-all posture makes him a tempting target for faultfinding - and there are faults to be found. Fussell repeats his theme with monotonous regularity and reduces it to arithmetic: bad + pretension = BAD. As topic after topic illustrates this formula, the whole enterprise begins to seem less like a book than a heavily padded op-ed piece.

Even more egregious is the book's ugly undertone of class snobbery. Fussell affects an exculpatory, almost protective attitude toward the lower class, by saying it can act only badly, whereas the middle and upper classes have the pretension to act BADly.

While a social critic needn't be fair or hopeful (if he were, he wouldn't be very entertaining), he should give the impression that he'd be happy if, however implausibly, things got better. Fussell never does this because he aspires to be an aristocrat, not of wealth or position, but of taste and intelligence. An aristocrat wants, above all, to preserve the established order and his lofty place in it. The worst thing that could happen to Fussell would be for American standards to improve.

Go easy on your wallet and have fun picking from a variety of traditional Japanese appetizers and noodle dishes: Soba- high energy buckwheat noodles (great for body builders), Udon - thick wheat noodles and Ramen - curly whole wheat noodles. Noodles in a hot or chilled broth that you can add to à la carte whatever toppings excite you. Upscale, modern decor. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

This casually elegant dining spot corners the international market on gourmet specialities. Some favorites of the Harvard Sq. crowd are the salad bar, cheese and chocolate fondues and Greek spinach pie. Imbibe Cambridge ale (the real stuff that doesn't give hangovers) at the bar; or warm your toes by one of three roaring firesides. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Gyuhama
827 Boylston St., Bos. 437-0188 A,D,MC,V $$$
Warm up with some sake at the sushi bar and watch the chefs adeptly wrap rice, seaweed and raw fish into delicious finger food. Or dine on cushions in one of Gyuhama's closed off rooms. One popular dish, Takara Fune - a Japanese style ship filled with boiled lobster, sashimi, vegetable tempura, beef teriyaki and shuma (pork dumplings), is served with salad, soup, rice and green tea ice cream. All for $23. Rock n roll sushi spices up the joint from 10:30pm-2am nightly. Waitresses step out of kimonos and into miniskirts and leather bomber jackets. The music rocks and even the menu offers a little more zing! Open daily for lunch and dinner.

190 Newbury St., Bos. 536-0097 A,MC,V $
Read some Dickens while you listen to a selection of classical and New Age music and sample the roast vegetable antipasto. Eat inside; or on nice days, relax on the terrace. Reserve for parties of 5 or more. Open 7 days for lunch and dinner. Don't miss the delectable Sun. brunch (11:00am-3:30pm).

Icarus
3 Appleton St., Bos. 426-1790 A, D,MC,V $$$
Melt your mouth but not your wings at this informal but sophisticated American regional restaurant in the South End. Dine at mahogany tables under softly lighted period fixtures. A favorite appetizer on the ever-changing menu is the polenta with braised wild mushrooms. Compliment your breast of veal stuffed with porcini and portobello mushrooms, braised with roast garlic and sage, with one of 100 choice wines. Enjoy jazz at the bar every Fri. Casual dress. Dinner daily. Sun. brunch is served 11am-3pm.

Jasper's
240 Commercial St., Bos. 523-1126 D,MC,V $$$$
Jasper White is rightly lauded for his waterfront establishment's outstanding consistency. The service is impeccable without being snooty, the decor pleasantly contemporary and the food sublime. Jasper likes to take simple plebeian dishes and add to them subtle nuances and spice. Try the signature pan roasted lobster with chevril and chives and the baked chocolate bread and butter pudding for dessert. Appropriate dress. Open Tue.-Sat. for dinner.

Kebab'N'Kurry
30 Massachusetts Ave., Bos. 536-9835 A,D,MC,V $$
This small basement restaurant offers an extensive menu. The nan (Indian bread) is superb, often stuffed with potatoes and other goodies. Order a maharani thaali (Queen's platter) and sample a variety of dishes including: dal (lentils), paneer (cheese in a curried sauce) chickpeas and basmati rice. Open daily for lunch (except Sun.) and dinner.

King & I
145 Charles St., Bos. 227-3320 259 Newbury St., Bos. 437-9611 D,MC,V $$
You won't find Yule Brenner; but you will find great Thai food. Try the chicken and coconut soup and the shrimp in love. Open daily for lunch (except Sat.) and dinner.

Legal Sea Foods
Park Plaza Hotel, 27 Columbus Ave., Bos. 426-4444 A,D,MC,V $$$
5 Cambridge Ctr., Kendall Sq., Camb. 864-3400
43 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill 270-9700
Burlington Mall, Burlington 270-9700
Legals, rightly known as Boston's best fish house, has an unquestioned standard of excellence. Founder George Berkowitz lives by his motto, "if it's not fresh, it's not Legal". In fact, all the fish is personally inspected on the boats. One of many highlights is the Seafood casserole - a medley of salmon, scallops, shrimp and scrod. Open Mon.-Fri. for lunch and dinner. Weekends, dinner menu only.

Locke-Ober's 3 Winter Pl., Bos. 542-1340 A, MC,V $$$$
Opened in 1875, Locke-Ober's has been visited by such personalities as Marilyn Monroe, Joe DiMaggio, E.E. Cummings and the infamous Kennedys. The mahogany floors and chandeliers add to the "Turn of the Century" look at this Brahmin institution which serves up Continental and New England cuisine. Always a highlight is the Lobster Savannah (shelled, diced lobster prepared in a cream sauce with pimentos, bell peppers, mushrooms, sherry and Parmesan cheese). Lunch served Mon.-Fri. Dinner daily. Jacket and tie required.

Mary Chung Restaurant
447 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. $
This inexpensive Chinese joint located in Central Sq. is always full. The menu offers good Szechuan in heaping portions. Be sure to try Mary's specialty, a spicy broth with pork dumplings, bean sprouts and veggies.

Ristorante Marino
2465 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 868-5454 A,MC,V $$
See food prepared right before your eyes from behind a big picture window. Dine in a large atrium under a glass roof on one of several organic and chemical-free dishes. Marino owns several farms from where all the produce and meats originate. His farm in Natick (87 Pleasant St.) is open to the public. Try their porchetti, daily pig specials. Lunch Mon-Sat. Open daily for dinner.

5 Charles St. South, Transportation Bldg., Bos. 723-6800 A,D,MC,V $$
Dine on salmon fishcakes (a layer of potato pancake and salmon) under cathedral high ceilings and play with the folk art pieces on each table-they're for sale. Frescoes of putti and hanging sculptured suits add to Rocco's overall cheer. Desserts, including a chocolate chip cheesecake are the best part, so save room! You can sit at the long cherry wood bar that also functions as a gallery. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

546 Massachusetts Ave., Camb. 547-9280 A,MC,V $
This Indian dive/restaurant at Central Sq. specializes in Northern Indian cuisine. After some pakoras (spinach and cauliflower deep-fried in chickpea batter) and raita (yogurt and cucumber), choose from several chicken and shrimp tandoori (baked in a clay oven) and curry plates. Lunch Mon.-Sat. Dinner daily. Relax over chaiy (Indian tea) at the Sun. buffet-style brunch from 12:00-3pm.

Skipjack's Seafood Emporium
2 Brookline Place, Brookline Village 232-8887 A.D.MC.V $$
Fresh seafood will tantalize you at this light and airy, pastel coated restaurant. Try the tuna Skipjack style - prepared with a mild cajun flavor. Berber swordfish, a swordfish steak baked with Moroccan blend of 14 spices served with seasonal chutney, also pleases. Choose from a wide array of wines with your meal. Reservations are recommended on weekends.

Sorento's
86 Peterborough St., Bos. 424-7070 MC,V $$
Enjoy a wide variety of scrumptious Italian dishes, at very reasonable prices. The gourmet pizzas are mouth-watering. The casual atmosphere and quick and friendly service all make for a quaint little Italian restaurant. Free delivery is also offered in a limited area.

St. Botolph Restaurant
99 St. Botolph St., Bos. 266-3030 A,D,MC,V $$$
Dine in a trendy polished café or eat more formally upstairs. Either way, you'll love the Italian (café fare) and Continental cuisine (upstairs) offered at this charming brownstone establishment. One critics' pick is the noisettes of lamb with tarragon fettucini, goat cheese and spinach topped off with an ample slice of white chocolate cheesecake. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Sun. brunch 11:30am-3pm.

Union Oyster House
41 Union St., Bos. 227-2750 A,D,MC,V $$
Opened in 1826, this Boston landmark is the oldest restaurant in continuing business in the U.S. Their raw oyster bar, where you can still gobble down oysters, littlenecks and cherrystones, was often a hangout for Daniel Webster. If raw isn't your bag, you can order up the popular crab cakes in Newburg sauce or broiled scrod. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

The Improper Tourist

The Improper Bostonian's Tips for the Out of Towner

by Jannette Tucker

So you've found yourself in America's most historic city, and you're wondering what to do. Well, you could do the traditional Freedom Trail walk, but there's lots more to do in this city than first meets the eye.

If you want to learn what's currently the butt of jokes in the Hub, check out Shear Madness at the Charles Playhouse (426-5225). This murder mystery, where the audience decides the ending, is ongoing sheer entertainment.

If you need to take in all of Boston in a glance, try the Skywalk on the 50th floor of the Prudential Tower. You'll catch a sweeping view of Beantown - Logan Airport, the Charles River, Back Bay, Fenway Park. On a clear day, you can see all the way to New Hampshire and Vermont! Call 236-3318 for details.

If you need a little more motion commotion while taking this birds-eye view of the town, give the Boston Helicopter Tours a call. They'll whisk you over Copley Square, the John Hancock Building, Fenway Park, the USS Constitution, Boston Harbor and much more. Tours run all day from 9am. A 15-mile flight is $40 while the 25-mile route, which includes Cambridge, costs $50 per person. Call 357-6868 for details.

Once you've seen a view of Boston from the sky, get down and start walking those streets. No one should come to Boston without taking a stroll down historic, quaint Charles Street in Beacon Hill. The old-style buildings and store fronts remind one of London during the Dickens era.

Although every tourist should also make his or her way down Newbury Street, (Boston's Rodeo Drive), December tourists have an extra treat in store for them. Carolers are performing throughout the whole month, and the stores compete in a window decorating contest, showing off some of their best merchandise.

For more unique findings in the city, start out at the The Black Heritage Trail, 46 Joy Street. See Boston as it was to many African-Americans - a gateway to freedom from the south. You will see some of the most important buildings involved in African-American history. The Museum of African-American History is responsible for the trail. Follow the blue line on the sidewalks. Call 742-1854 for more information.

Now we're really getting into some history here. If all that walking has made you thirsty, take a break at the Bell in Hand Tavern, 45 Union Street. It's the oldest operating pub or tavern in the country, opening in 1794. Call 227-2098 for details.

All this tourist activity could make you hungry, too. Follow the likes of Daniel Webster, Calvin Coolidge and John Kennedy and grab some grub at the Union Oyster House, 45 Union Street. The Union Oyster House is the longest-operating restaurant in the country.

For one of the most unique experiences in Boston, and one that many residents don't even know about, take a quick journey into the Christian Science Mother Church's Mapparium, 1 Norway Street. This is a good stop for restless children in need of a quick fix of entertainment. The experience involves standing on a glass bridge in the center of a huge stained glass globe, built between 1932 and 1935. It's made out of 608 glass panels set in bronze. Don't expect the geography to be politically correct, however. Since it's considered a work of art, political boundaries have not been updated. Glass doesn't absorb sound, so be prepared for some funky, uncanny acoustics within the globe. A whisper echoes to resemble a shout.

And what would a trek through Boston be without a stop at the famed Filene's Basement? Be prepared for enormous crowds during the holiday season as tons of people flock to the famous basement looking for a great deal. The basement is located at 426 Washington Street at Downtown Crossing.

By the time the night comes, you're going to need to relax, so we suggest a visit to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who make music all through the year. Seiji Ozawa will be music director until April. For ticket information, call 266-1492.

The Iguana Cantina-
So Loud You Can't Hear Yourself Drink

The interior of the Cantina complete with talking Iguana.

by Tobin Street

The Iguana Cantina in Waltham is, shall we say, an enigma in the world of Mexican restaurants. One enters this establishment and is greeted, "Welcome to the Iguana" by - yes - a giant iguana. This electronically-triggeredd greeting device was designed by some M.I.T. engineers. "It has a noise-sensing device so when the crowd gets larger and louder, so does the iguana," says R. Jay Cotton, General Manager. Sam Kinison would love it here except he'd be a sure loser in a shouting match with this Iguana. This is one loud bar!

We sat at the bar and therefore can't comment on the true dining experience at this establishment. However, you can order the full menu at the bar. The chips and salsa were excellent and the chicken enchiladas were a great complement to the Acapulco Gold Margarita - something in the ranks of a Rattlesnake specialty.

The bottled beer selection is diverse. Negra Modelo, Bohemia, Tecate, Sol, Pacifico, Corona and Corona Light, Miller Genuine Draught Sam Adams Lager and Sharps. Draught selection is normal enough with the addition of the Iguana Brew, a house specialty comparable to Budweiser. If you come with a group, try the Cactus Bowl, a 48 ounce concoction of liquors and fruit juices. It's sure to wet your whistle.

The immediate crowd was an interesting mix. Some yuppies, some construction workers and a few token weirdos who looked in need of a friend. The fact that the Iguana can attract such a mixed crowd and manage to keep them relaxed is a feather in their cap.

The decor (scorpions in glass bubbles on the bar, a cd jukebox and mexican memorabilia) attracts all types and is an impetus to their customers to relax and enjoy their drinks. Cotton describes their look as, "an authentic Mexican cantina. There's plenty to look at. We're always adding new memorabilia on the walls."

Only a couple of late nighters were "wastin away" on their margaritas. They were the few not bothered by the noise. The Iguana would have been more enjoyable if we could have held a normal conversation. Frankly, we were relieved to leave the place. We don't necessarily parade our convictions but the management of the Iguana Cantina should either turn down the volume or leave it as it is and add a dance floor.

Wed. night is gay night. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Know who you are and dress accordingly is the club's policy. 21+ unless otherwise noted..

•WALLY'S 424-1408, 427 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Treat yourself to unadulterated Jazz nightly at Wally's. Mon. is Blues. Relax over a beer and get into the spirit. Don't be afraid to sway in the aisle when the music jams. It's always smoky and crowded, but Wally's has heart. No cover. Casual dress. Arrive early to get a seat. Mon1.--Blues Night Mon2.--Blues Night

•WESTERN FRONT 492-7772, 343 Western Ave., Camb.. A multicultural Reggae and Jazz bar where it's difficult not to get caught up in the rasta spirit. It's dark and dingy inside, but the place sparks alive when the bands take the stage. Cover varies from moderate to heavy. Casual dress. A must for any Reggae lover..

Wed1.--TBA Thur1.--Kirkland Bodie with special guest Spyda Fri1.--Cool Runnings (Reggae from CT) Sat1.--Cool Runnings Sun1.--Gregory Jackson Cultural Connection Tue1.--City Trees (jazz) Wed2.--Equalities (Reggae) Thur2.--New Horizon (Reggae) Fri2.--The I-Tones (Reggae) Sat2.--The I-Tones

•WHO'S ON FIRST 247-3353, 23 Yawkey St., Bos.. A sports bar nestled just a baseball throw away from Fenway. Who's plays host to a mix of jocks, college students and baseball fans. (Yankee fans, beware) DJ music and an occasional live band provide the dance beat. Cover varies from modest to moderate. Casual dress. Free buffet and singing contest Fri. afternoons..

Wed1.--Call for listings.

Wed1.--The Fringe performs every Wed. Thur1.--The Bruce Gertz Quartet Fri1.--Jerry Gonz Bergonzi Sat1.--Gonz Sun1.--The Jeff Covell Trio Mon1.--The Scott Mullett Group Tue1.--The Peter Golemme Quartet Thur2.--The Rob Levit Quartet Fri2.--Art Lande Quintet Sat2.--Art Lande Quintet

•ZANZIBAR 451-1955, 1 Boylston Pl., Bos.. This large two story dance club is modeled after a large Caribbean dwelling complete with palm trees. Top 40 and Dance music is played to an upscale clientele. Local hotel concierges often recommend Zanzibar as a choice pick to their guests. The cover is heavy but varies. Jacket and tie required..

Madcaps and Sane

To judge by the swarm in this store, hats are making a comeback by coming back in a way that emphasizes the costumey, slightly tongue-in-cheek dimension of hattery. It's as if grownups were imitating little girls ornately playing dress up. At this moment - before linen and straw do their seasonal supplanting - velvet rules. One posture is slouch and squash - a black velvet hat may reverse into a jewel-tone paisley velvet; or it may be worn black-side-out with just a teasing dribble of the fabric from the other side. A designer named Hooray Henri makes shapeful, utterly romantic and rather Edwardian hats with a big curving brim that's flipped up at the middle, as if a finger has been pressed against an upper lip and covered with flowers; customers are constantly trying them on. Even more ornate hats inspired by old movies, and high-fashion photography of the Fifties, come in gold lame with a mini satellite dish-shaped stiff black veil or other decorational uplift; one of these hats would speak louder than a fancy dress for an elegant, non-humorless, occasion. Other period hats (toques and cloches), a sexy black velvet jockey hat and berets can be found here. But, the humble boyish baseball cap has spun completely out, with "Thai Baseball Hats" that are madly covered with designs made of bead ornaments, and others covered with braids and stars, velvet and ribbons. In its more traditional aspect, Toppers also sells mens' classic fedoras in fur felt, swaggering Stetsons, Western suede hats, and Outback styles for both sexes.

HOUSE OF BOOKWORMING

House of Sarah Books

Recent chatters and browsers at this comfy, used bookstore in Inman Square included a neighborhood Meter Maid and a retired Professor of philosophy, each revisiting their favorite shelves. The House of Sarah offers good, largely hard-backed books in about 40 categories - books that turn out to have real solidity in their respective fields which are as often as not, classics and perennials. For instance, the Psychology section recently had a "handspan-thick" volume of Freud, some collections of the Psychoanalytic Study Of The Child, certain Gestalt regulars, and readings from Psychology Today. The literature section showed a good crop of Cheever, Tolstoy, Fitzgerald (F. Scott and Edward) and some Annie Dillard. Mary, the proprieter, says she caters to the common reader (of middle and high brow, though there are paperback romances and other popular fiction upstairs), the academic and the collector. Prices range from $2 to about $7. Another specialty is women in religion, and those books are found in a symbolically placed "Upper Room." Among her store's big attractions are boxed, solidly-bound books, some in imitation leather, including the Rubayat, Swann's Way, and some beautiful poetry collections. For the real collector - some first editions, and such treasures as Sir Thomas Aquinas, rebound in half-leather with marbled endpapers - 5 volumes for $210. Mary did the rebinding, and will, for $10 and expenses, bring your loose literary floppers back into line. Soon, she will acquire a literary familiar - a cat to go with the sofa - and that spells sitting around and reading.

Donate Your MUSCles to Science

Because the students at this school for massage, the Muscular Therapy Institute, need clients on whom to practice and learn the whole art - from respectful hello to peaceful goodbye - your lucky body can be worked on here for $10 or $20, depending on the level of the student. Former dancer Ben Benjamin founded this 2-year long training school in 1974 that is now located in a surprisingly relaxing and warm, old school building. "Who the masseuse is comes across," as one MTI administrator put it, and that grace and restraint of self that the students are trained to develop comes through. An MTI massage (delivered with oil) incorporates broad Swedish-style strokes with frictional attention to trigger points; very gradually (depending on the client's needs, particular tensions or stay-away considerations) the pressure deepens. What is "underneath" tension (by way of emotional armoring) also receives gentle attention. The massage begins with a mild rocking that seems to have a lightening effect. Continuous gestures - some in a spiralling pattern, some thumbingly emphatic - continue on down to the feet. Ones' manipulated foot begins to feel like an otter playing around in slippery banks. When that leg is completed and the masseuse moves to the other leg, the "done" one feels distinctly more relaxed, almost "melted" and somehow longer than the still - unmassaged leg. One rigor of the program requires students to give a number of massages to their teachers. They also do outreach-some of it to the elderly - so they too can "enjoy the gift of touch."

AROUND TOWN

Performance art is making its way to the ice when the Ice Theatre of New York stop in Boston for one night only at B.U.'s Walter Brown Arena. Ice Theatre of New York is a dance company on ice and is presented by Dance Umbrella in Cambridge. Following the performance, the audience is invited to stay and skate with the company members. (Rental skates are available, but children under 12 must wear helmets, which are not available.) Tickets for the show on Feb. 14 at 8pm, are $18; children under 12 are half price. Tickets can be purchased by calling TicketPro at 1-800-828-7080.

Twenty-foot sailboats and spinnakers, sailing to victory at "The America's Cup" are some of the scenes to be enjoyed during the Stoli Cristall Ice Carving Competition at Faneuil Hall Marketplace Feb. 13-16. Over 20 ice carvings will be on display during the competition. The judging ceremony will take place on Feb. 15 at 12:30pm. One of the highlights of the contest is the arrival of the original America's Cup to Boston, which will arrive the evening of Feb. 14. The event is free and open to the public. For more information call 642-5987 or 642-5950.

Fish, balloon men, Beatle-esque hooks and other pointy things are what Robyn Hitchcock and the Egyptians are all about. Witness this musical master of surreality as he performs cuts from his latest album Perspex Island (A&M) and other weird stuff at Avalon on February 8 in a special 6pm show. Call 931-2000 for tickets.

Director Oliver Stone is doing more than just making movies. He's on a national press tour to not only promote his movie, JFK, but encourage the American public to write to their Congressmen and request a reopening of the Warren Commission files. At a press conference in the Charles Hotel recently, Stone responded to mass media criticism of his movie, asking, "Why is the press so concerned?" He reflected on the "anti-Stone" articles and asked, "Why won't the New York Times and Washington Post print my letters? I don't think the press represents the people anymore."

Following a successful run of The Nutcracker, the Boston Ballet will present an enchanting production of A Midsummer Night's Dream from February 6 to February 16. This classic comedy of mischief and merriment is set to all of the "Incidental Music" written by Felix Mendleson, including passages like Overture, Nocturne, Scherzo and Wedding March. The program will open with George Balanchine's Allegro Brillante. Tickets are currently on sale through TicketMaster and can be ordered by calling 931-2000.

Bostonians can now see what all the hype is surrounding ACE award recipient Richard Jeni when he stops in at Nick's Comedy Stop on Feb. 7. Jeni caused quite a stir in the cable industry when his hour-long Showtime special, Richard Jeni 2: Crazy From The Heat, had the highest-rated premiere for a single stand-up comic in the history of the cable network. Jeni, in the same vane as Jay Leno, specializes in finding the humor in everything from joining a health club to the Jaws saga, from Dr. Ruth to buying a car. Showtimes are 8:30 and 10:30pm. Tickets are $15. Call 482-0930.

LOVE IN THE RECESSION

Romancing in a Down Econmy

by Sasha Cavander

Hot love is better than cold gold. Doing less with more does not mean doing without. It means having more fun with less money. Proper candy, flowers and gifts are passe anyway. The Improper.Bostonian gives you a whole new palette from which to choose.

Dip deep into the pockets of your imagination, wit and whimsy. Pull out surprises the way magicians pull rabbits from a plain old hat. Think surprise! Not just for the moment but long-term - as with any good investment. (You want your love to last, don't you?) Spend your emotional bank-balance. Stash more away for the future. Fun is where you find it but share it with someone you care for.

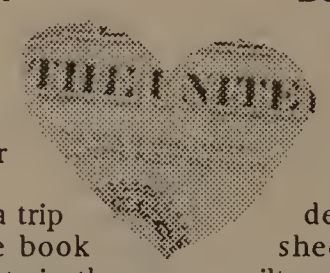
Welcome to Love in the Nineties

"I think people should keep on doing it," says John Spooner, stockbroker and author of Sex and Money.

Doing what? "It," was all he said.

Steve, a bond salesman at a local brokerage firm, was also asked about the status of recession romance. The financial world saw market-meltdown in '87. Now, there's lots of "spending-as-usual."

"My wife, Lee, can't even spell recession," Steve said. "She thinks it's spelled s-p-e-n-d. That's $pend with the dollar sign first." He's foregoing filet mignon for Valentine's Day this year and planning to surprise Lee with "heart-shaped hamburger patties" which he'll make himself. Slathered with ketchup "red hearts" and edged with lacey mashed potatoes, it sounds like a heartfelt dish.



Juliet Schor, an associate professor of economics at Harvard and author of a new book The Overworked American: The Unexpected Decline of Leisure wonders, "Will people even have time to celebrate Valentines Day this year?"

"Economists are not a romantic lot - we basically count up the change," admits Professor David Weinstein at Harvard's Economics Department. He focuses mostly on Japan - which President Bush blames for ruining our money fun in America right now. "In Japan, where a large number of marriages are arranged, they've not had an economic downturn. So love's probably not suffering in the Orient Himeji, the castle town where Shogun was filmed. This could be the perfect place for Valentine's Day.

TRAVEL

Travel is where it's at. Especially adventure travel. If you can't afford a trip to the Caribbean, Tahiti, the Galapagos Islands or Gstaad, take a trip on the T instead. Ride a line you've never been on before. (Our research shows some Cantabrigians have never been off the Red Line ("Le Rouge" to them) in their entire lives. Try the Blue or Orange Lines instead, and ride all the way to the end and back. First buy the giant bag of popcorn at Joey's Gelateria in Faneuil Hall and take it with you and your love on the T. ($2.50 and not your usual toothbreaker, microzapped stuff.)

If you can't get to Florence or Fiji or even the Seychelles Islands this Valentine's Day, buy a beautiful book on the place instead. The most sumptuous book won't cost as much as dining out, and the pleasure will last and last, as you pore over lavish pages together - till you get there. Boston has bookstores and discount bookstores and used bookstores and so does Cambridge - at feast or famine prices.

If you do have money for a trip somewhere, buy her the book and slip two real air tickets in the book (between pages, instead of a bookmark. Take a picture of her face when she opens it up).

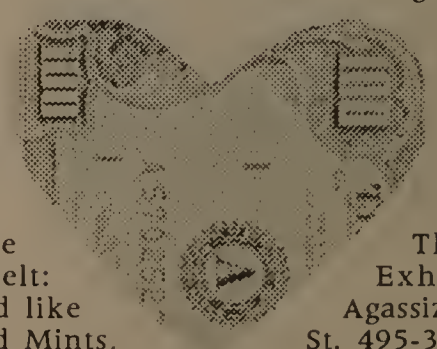
Or make up two tickets as a "coupon," good for future travel when you have more cash.

Travel to L.L. Bean to shop in the middle of the night (It's open 24 hr.s a day). Browse, talk to the other people shopping at 3:00, 4:00 or 5:00 a.m (maybe you have something in common), or buy something you really need: like a new snowsuit to wear to Opening Day at Fenway.

Or buy some cross-country skis and go skiing at dawn. The L.L. Bean Factory Store - right across the street in Freeport - has sale merchandise; They're open seven days a week but only from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The Freeport Brochures available at the stores tell you what's there and what's where; restaurants, and other shops in the area like Ralph Lauren, etc.

Ice-fishing, and smelting from a shack with a woodstove are popular Maine sports. Bostonians should try at least once.



After your shopping foray (with the international night-set from NY, PA, Canada, local hunters, college kids, insomniacs, and tourists ga-ga at the idea of being at L.L. Bean) you can go cross country skiing with your new skis & mittens; or have breakfast at the Miss Brunswick Diner or 1- 1/2 hours north at Moody's Diner - atmospheric greasy spoons.

MISS BRUNSWICK DINER is at 101 1/2 Pleasant St, in Brunswick ME (15 mins from Freeport) - (207) 729-5948 - open 5:00 a.m. - 8 p.m., seven days a week. Christmas is the only day it's closed. A favorite for 51 years, it looks like an old railway car, has a jukebox with today's and fifties' hits and an old fashioned coke machine. Everything is made from scratch including their pies and "truckers' breakfasts." Pancakes, 3 eggs, bacon or ham or sausage, potatoes, toast and unlimited coffee - all for only $4.15. A financial expert "highly recommends the Miss B. Diner" though last time he was there was in 1974. "Was the food that good ?" we asked him. "Nah, "he replied. "Whadja eat?" "Who knows?" "But you'd still recommend it?" we asked. "Absolutely! I HIGHLY recommend it," he told us.

B&B's come in all prices and decors (Books, travel agents, or word-of-mouth are sources for the best buys). A charming country home with friendly hosts, delicious breakfasts, crisp sheets and fluffy towels and quilts can seem worlds away from the urban grit and gridlock of your everyday life. You can always take those sumptuous picture books on Hawaii, African Safaris and Provence with you to the B&B to pore over and pretend you're there. Together.

CANDY

Skip the standard designer chocolates and take your sweetie instead, to Harbor Sweets chocolate factory in Salem. Savor the scents and sample the most sensuous and expensive dark chocolate made in America. They're handmade and heartfelt: Sweet Sloops (shaped like sailboats), Marblehead Mints, Sand Dollars, Periwinkles etc. What started as a basement hobby turned into a labor of love and a national business. Inside the factory, it's homey, red and white everywhere; and with chocolates always in red boxes, it's a Valentine all year round.

The prices hover around $17 for a half-pound box, $32.50 a pound.

Their toll-free number is: 1-800-234-4860; OPEN MON - FRI 8:30a.m. to 4:30p.m. and SAT'S 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Penny candy - especially when it's imaginatively packaged, has a pretty simplicity. You don't have to weigh in with $25-35 per pound chocolates to say sweet nothings. Put the candy in a funny piggy bank, new or antique, or an old cooky tin. Place them in his or her shoes, before they step into them in the morning.

An aspiring band musician, Kirk says an evening with someone you love "in front of the fire, listening to old jazz records, is bliss, topped by "three chocolate Kisses for each of you: one to savor the past, one to taste the present and one to sample the future - when you will have more money."

FLOWERS

One perfect flower can say as much as the obligatory "two dozen red roses." Or better yet, an offbeat mix: a sprig of this, a spray of that. Freesia for its intoxicating perfume, a few wildflowers for abandon or a rose (not red). Spend time and thought - instead of money. Tie it up with pretty ribbon - printed with flowers, or animals, or wire-edged gold or silver ribbons that stay the way you put them - and deliver it windblown or formal. Even new laces for her running shoes or favorite sneakers is better than the same-old florist's paper. Tie a charm, pin or beaded necklace into a stem for a throwaway look but lasting surprise. Even if it's dimestore jewelry. The pure sentiment may win over the real diamonds or emeralds which you'll be able to afford years down the road. "Remember the year we had NO money and you bought me that silly charm bracelet from Woolworth's? I still love it!"

For a real surprise, take her to see the GLASS FLOWERS at Harvard. Over 3,000 exquisite, bizarre and unique glass botanicals from wild strawberries to orchids, all live here. People come stare from all over the world: you're right here, where they bloom forever.

The Glass Flowers Exhibit at Harvard's Agassiz Building, 26 Oxford St. 495-3045

Mon.to Sat., 9a.m. to 4:30p.m. Sun., 1-4:30.

LITTLE GIFTS MEAN A LOT

We think fax and fancy. Don't! The simplest pleasures are right under your nose - so simple most people miss them. Yuppie gadgets are out. Forget the pressure to get a BMW gelati-maker that plugs into your car ignition and turns out sorbets at stoplights; a salad spinner that can steer your yacht or wash-and-dry Persian carpets. Suddenly simplicity counts. Savor it.

Color-xerox a "want ad" for her or him. "WANTED: red-head named Blondie, 5'7", makes brownies but no entrees. Can't fax or fone, but loves to tango. For a trip to Maui, March 15-23, Call Bob." Don't forget to give your phone number. You can glue funny cartoons, or pictures that fit his/her personality all around the edges of the poster.

Have a photo of yourself as a baby or child blown up and framed.
She'll love it! So will he.

Frame the tickets to the first movie or Celtics game you went to - anything from your first date. This is history!

Do something they hate for someone you love. Stand in line for an hour at the Post Office - for them. Haul laundry to the dry cleaners. Go to dinner with their parents, if they don't want to. In short, anything they hate doing - do it. And do it with love.

Pack their bags for a surprise trip and don't tell them where you're going until you're AT the airport. * NOTE: A trip to a golf resort - because you'd love it when she hates golf - doesn't count.

GAMES PEOPLE PLAY

Boggle, Scrabble, Monopoly in a foreign language - are still popular entertainment. People just forgot. There's a reason that sales of poker cards are up - way up - since the recession. Customers have been known to ignore their pheasant and wine at the Harvest because they were so intent on a killer match of Scrabble en francais. Have you tried staging a scavenger hunt since you were 10? Knocking at doors on Beacon Hill and Back Bay for "a lace bra, let's see,that's number seven on our list, and then a shoehorn, and a p i n k hairbrush...?"

OLDIES BUT GOODIES

Skip the latest flicks for the VCR. Dip into the oldies. Let Bogey or Jimmy Stewart say the smart lines for you. See Grace Kelly or Katharine Hepburn throw sparks. Let their repartee keep romance alive while you take the night off to watch, laugh and listen - and learn about old-fashioned love.

SCENTUOUS SCENTS FOR FEW CENTS

For about $1 to $4.50 a bar, you can buy soap in sensuous scents. Per bubble, that works out at only a fraction of a cent. Black soaps, Siena and Magno, are very popular for men, along with Aberdeen Heather (pearlized green), Patchouli, Vetiver, Sandalwood, Meridien and more.
Soaps that smell good enough to eat come in fruit flavors like Pink Grapefruit, Lemon, Lime, and Cucumber.

SOAP SHOPS: Crabtree & Evelyn, Boston and Body Shop, Cambridge.

MARRIED WITH STEPCHILDREN?

Do something nifty for his/her children (your stepchildren) instead of yelling at them to clean up their rooms or help set the table. If they're small, surprise them with a terrific toy. If they're older, a CD or a diary with a lock and key, so they'll know you won't snoop. Bake them their absolute favorite cookies or make a batch of fudge.

KIDSTUFF IS THE BEST STUFF

Don't laugh! Go to the Children's Museum, Computer Museum, Science Museum or Aquarium - just the two of you. Kids know how to have fun. After you've made the wave at the Science Museum, or hopped on the keys of the Giant

THE ART OF SUPERBOWLING

Lynne Shanoski and Marv Freadman of Boston

by Leslie Semonian

As the Washington Redskins were moving towards victory, 400 people were enjoying themselves at the Twelfth Annual Superbowl Party sponsored by Public Action for the Arts, on Jan. 26, at Destinations Entertainment Complex near Haymarket Square. The event raised almost $5,000 to benefit the Public Action Arts Endowment.

Public Action for the Arts is a non-profit organization that arranges arts events for the benefit of more than 600 members. The profits that are generated are placed into a trust with grants issued from the interest earned by the endowment for local artists and art establishments.

This group was initially responsible for establishing the Massachusetts Arts Lottery, which has grown into the popular Megabucks game. A small portion of the revenues Megabucks receives goes towards approximately 4,000 arts organizations each year.

For a mere $20, guests were entertained by the Joe Masters band and Jennifer Rivers who sang the National Anthem. A delicious buffet was prepared before the game. Throughout the night, silent and live auctions took place. Among the more popular items presented were three Sheraton weekends and Phantom of the Opera tickets. Artwork by local artists also received bids.

Chairman Joseph Hill, responsible for coordinating the event, was quick to point out the element of fun associated with the charity. Judging from the lively atmosphere he couldn't have been more accurate.

WHAT COLOR IS YOUR LOVE?

by Jannette Tucker

As the holiday celebrating romance nears, a uniform interest in the classically beautiful rose is piquing. Men and women will show affection for each other via a flower known as the Queen of Flowers.

The History: The origin of the rose is debatable, but according to myth, Flora, the goddess of flowers, happened upon a lifeless body of a nymph in the woods and changed her into a flower. Once done, Flora was overwhelmed by the beauty of her new creation. She crowned it the Queen of Flowers and named it the "rose."

Fascination with this "royal" flower dates back to ancient times. Rosary beads were once crafted from fine rose petals. Persian King Cyrus the Great was known to seek solitude and peace after long battles by escaping to his rose gardens, which stretched for miles and was known as the largest in history. The Romans were also intrigued by the rose. They believed the flower could ward off drunkenness and therefore ended their formal feasts with cascading showers of fresh rose petals.

The Message: There are many different meanings for the rose, each color having an accompanying message. Uniformity applies in certain instances, according to Anne-Marie Harris, owner of RosExpress, 125 B Street in South Boston. America's Rose Growers and The Language of Flowers, floral guide books, agree on some meanings. Knowing what your flower suggests will enhance your gift to greater heights and enchantment.

Red: "I Love You", respect, courage.

Pink: Gentle and graceful, compassion and tenderness

Light Pink: Admiration

Deep Pink: Thank you.

White: Innocence, purity, humility, charm, and lovely.

Yellow: Joy, gladness, wealth of gratitude, honor and sometimes jealousy.

Coral: Expression of desire.

Thornless: Love at first sight.

Care of the Rose: Once you've received the Queen of Flowers as a token of someone's emotions, you're going to want them to last as long as possible. According to Harris, there's plenty you can do to extend the life of your roses.

"The best thing to do is cut the stems immediately in cold water at an angle," she said. "They'll last about a week if you change the water every other day. Every time you change the water, cut the stems again." Harris explained that bacteria grows on the stems, clogging their tips and preventing the rose from drinking the water properly. Cutting the stems clears the tips and allows your Queen of Flowers to live longer.

Suspense Makes Shining Through Stand Out

by Jason Alexander

Ed Leland (Michael Douglas) and Linda Voss (Melanie Griffith) are lovers on a dangerous mission inside Nazi Germany

Linda Voss, Melanie Griffith's character in Shining Through, credits melodramatic war films as her inspiration. In fact, this war-time spy drama also draws its character from the movies of a past age. Though it's a bit lengthy through failed epic aspirations, its shortcomings are covered by knife-edge tension and suspense. Shining Through is an enjoyable, nostalgic trip still modern enough to be relevant.

Told in flashback by a convincingly aged Melanie Griffith, the movie has two distinct parts. In the first, Linda Voss uses her German language skills to get a job as secretary to lawyer Ed Leland. With an imagination fueled by films, she concludes that Leland's frequent business trips and strange correspondence mean that he is a spy. The outbreak of war reveals Leland to indeed be working for American intelligence but, amid the pressures of war-time, he also suspends what has become a budding romance.

When an operative dies in Berlin, Voss volunteers to be the short-notice replacement. It is an assignment of heightened relevance and danger because she is half Jewish and has relatives hiding in Berlin. Her contact there is "Sunflower," an ornamental role played by Sir John Gielgud. Through his help and an unbelievable combination of helpful accidents, Voss joins the household of a high-ranking German officer, played with gullibility and softness by Liam Neeson.

In this second part of the movie, Voss becomes stranded in Germany. And though she has no training, she succeeds in securing vital information and eludes capture - despite swarming German soldiers. Voss then manages to discover where her relatives have taken refuge. This is all achieved with the constant threat of discovery avoided by only the thinnest veil of coincidence and luck. Her activities stretch credibility but Shining Through remains tense.

Linda Voss is a confident and cocky character and Melanie Griffith highlights this odd combination of determination and innocence. It is refreshing to see a well written and performed woman's role but disappointing when Michael Douglas rescues Voss and carries her to safety, with heroic bravado. Still Griffith is one of the strengths of the movie and presents a touching character who enjoys full support and sympathy from the audience.

Douglas plays Ed Leland with the traditional strong chin of classic heroes. Yet, he combines this with a self-deprecating air, making the character all the more enjoyable. The chemistry between Douglas and Griffith is very convincing, complementing both performances and providing occasional humor amid the tension of the story.

But the most important aspect of Shining Through is the manner in which director David Seltzer creates an atmosphere of omnipresent threat. As Voss enters Germany there is a shift in tone introducing the menace that surrounds her. By filming on location in what used to be East Germany Seltzer recaptures with dark realism the confidence of the third reich at its zenith. Even a small mistake, such as dropping a purse, becomes a moment of suspense and the audience is continually kept on edge.

The direction is not perfect. Seltzer is helped by Michael Kamen's score and the recreation of an age through props and costumes. Shining Through is clearly intended to be grand drama but some scenes drag and there simply isn't the range of characters to be an epic.

Shining Through is a film of considerable scope. It blends the aspects of espionage and romance with a realistic light touch that accents moments of considerable drama. There is nothing overwhelming about it, but Shining Through stands out amid a crowded movie field.

Alan and Naomi - An Uncluttered Drama

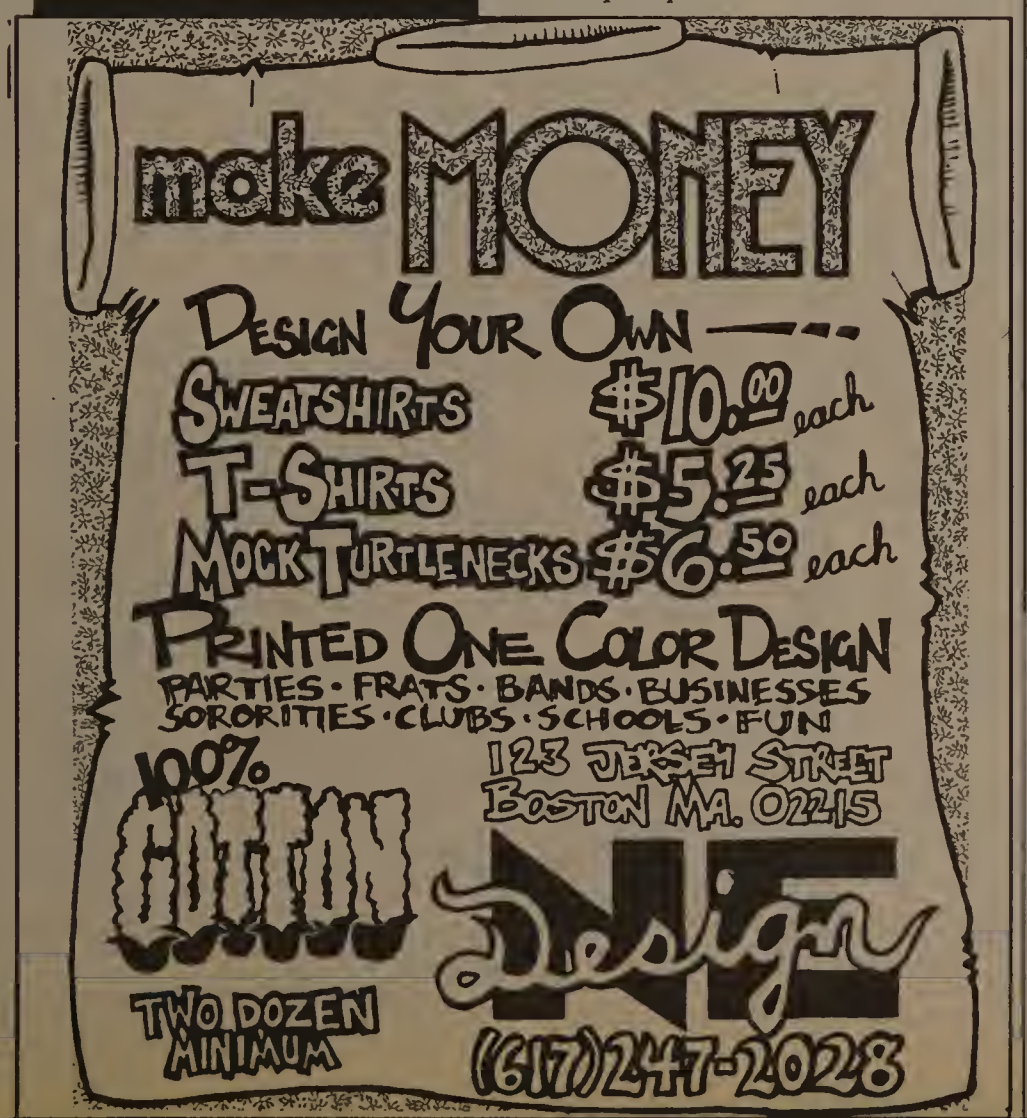
by Tobin Streett

One of the good things about a movie like Alan & Naomi is its simplicity. This film is without pretense. No egos to be satisfied, no potentially damaging subject matter and no blatantly obvious vehicles for any one star. This is a movie about hope, encouragement and courage.

It's 1944 and Brooklyn, New York is the scene for this unsettling drama. Lukas Haas stars as Alan Silverman, a 14 year-old kid whose interests in life are limited to stickball and model airplanes. The intrusion on his social life occurs when his parents, Sol (Michael Gross) and Ruth (Amy Aquino), introduce Alan to the new neighbor, Naomi. As a young French girl, Naomi (Vanessa Zaoui) is forced to adjust to more than just the American way of life. Naomi's widowed mother moves her to Brooklyn after she witnesses the death of her father at the hands of the Nazis.

The central theme of Alan & Naomi revolves around Naomi's inability to function as a "normal" teenager. Early in the film, director Sterling Van Wagenen reveals the severity of Naomi's dilemna. After Alan's parents offer his services to Naomi's mother, he visits her room, only to be greeted by a scene in which Naomi is slowly shredding paper on her bed. Not only does this reinforce the view by Alan that Naomi is a "crazy girl," it challenges him to probe her psyche even further. At first, Alan returns home to beg Sol for permission to not return. When he asks, "Why me?", Sol responds with a characteristic response, "Maybe because you're one of the lucky ones." Alan is rewarded during one of his visits by a response emblematic of Naomi's state of well being; Naomi initiates their dialogue through feigned ventriloquism using her puppet, Yvette.

In spite of her progress and perhaps more troubling is Naomi's view of herself. Naomi has placed the blame of her father's death on herself and it's only with Alan's assistance that we see her reenter society. Zaoui is a gifted young actress who falls deep into her character and vis a vis several early scenes, we see Zaoui's talents unfold. Naomi progressively responds to Alan and other external factors, eventually becoming strong enough to attend the local school. It is at this critical point in time that Alan must make another of many important decisions that asked of few 14 year-olds - how does he explain to his pal Shaun the nature of his mysterious daily "errands."



Naomi Kirschenbaum (Vanessa Zaoui) and Alan (Lukas Haas) are two young people who become close friends and share a deep understanding.in Alan and Naomi.

As Alan's father, Sol, Michael Gross gives a most convincing performance as the well-meaning Jewish father. Though he functions on the surface as a supporting character, Gross provides integral dialogue which serves as the shaping material for Alan's next move. He is the quintessential coach whose game plan for young Alan is followed to the letter. This is also one of the more subtle problems with Alan & Naomi.

It's difficult to point to the reasons why, in such a feelgood movie, we feel as if we're waiting for something to happen. Can we attribute this to the American moviegoer mentality or does Alan & Naomi carries its weight by deliberately manipulating the pace that it loses its punch. The problem with this adaptation of Myron Levoy's 1977 novel is not with the quality of acting, nor with the script. It is with something of a less dramatic nature: the story itself. More than just a slice-of-life movie, Alan & Naomi elicits your compassion and hope for the characters but leaves you wanting more. What that "more" is, can be left up to you, the viewer.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Freejack
"Wait for the Video"

The problem with Freejack is that it has all been seen before. This futuristic body-snatch film displays all of the accepted action movie cliches. As a race car driver pulled 18 years into the future, Emilio Estevez is understandably perplexed. His life is further complicated when he falls in grave danger of losing control over his body. The only redeeming feature of the film is the occasional unintentional humor. The sight of Mick Jagger zipping around in a tank and spouting the usual bad guy lines is also something you may want to laugh at. Eccentric maybe, but if you must see Freejack, wait for the video, it won't be long. J.A.

Inner Circle
"Unique Perspective - Wasted Opportunity"

As the Soviet Union crumbles, more and more is revealed about its history and people. The Inner Circle displays the cult of personality around Josef Stalin. Tom Hulce plays Stalin's personal film projectionist and, with the benefit of history, his complete adoration is ironic and quite amusing. However the film drifts in its focus, including a pointless sub-plot involving Bob Hoskins as the head of the K.G.B. The film is confused and unfocused in a failed attempt to be an epic. Because of its Russian director The Inner Circle has a unique perspective but in the end is a wasted opportunity.J.A

Hearts of Darkness
"A Facinating Insight"

Hearts of Darkness is a documentary on the making of Apocalypse Now. Using footage taken by Francis Coppola's wife, Eleanor, this film shows that surreal chaos was not limited to fiction. The insanity and intensity of the story is shown to be an accurate reflection of the cast and crew amid increasing confusion. In particular, Coppola himself appears overwhelmed by the production. His attempts to deal with money problems, Martin Sheen's heart attack, Marlon Brando's difficult genius and trying to complete a film without a written ending are all captured with immediacy, poignancy and occasional humor. Hearts of Darkness is a fascinating and unique insight into the making of one of the most famous movies of all time. J.A.

Father of the Bride
"Married to Mediocrity"

Father of the Bride is a frustratingly tame film. This story of wedding chaos is too occupied with Steve Martin's fatherly bond with his daughter to be anything more than another nice film. George Banks (Martin) and his wife Nina (Diane Keaton) have a storybook marriage and the prospective in-laws are not only pleasant but enormously wealthy to boot. This isn't average America. The writing is weak with few genuinely funny lines, relying instead on Steve Martin's charm and facial expressions. Even the addition of Martin Short as Franck Eggelhoffer, the affected wedding planner, can't life this film into the likes of other Steve Martin classics. J.A.

JFK
"Intellectually Stoned"

Surprise, Surprise! Oliver Stone has made a controversial film. With JFK, Stone has woven elements of the 1967 case presented against Clay Shaw by New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison with his own interpretations. The result is a film that, though extremely powerful and thought provoking, leaves the viewer with a dangerous visual of the events surrounding the assassination of president John F. Kennedy. Stone has created a masterpiece which should encourage further investigation into a case which until today has been closed to the blind eye of America. Kevin Costner is Garrison and is surrounded by a star-studded cast that includes Jack Lemmon, Joe Pesci, Sissy Spacek, Donald Sutherland and Gary Oldman. T.A.S.

VIDEO REVIEWS

Little Shop of Horrors
1987
Starring Rick Moranis
Directed with a theatrical feel by Frank Oz, Little Shop of Horrors is a wonderfully macabre film. Rick Moranis plays the unwitting ally of a flesh-eating plant called Audrey II. In return for his fame and fortune he must satisfy the plant's considerable appetite. There is a joyously evil cameo by Steve Martin as a dentist and energetic songs fueled by Levi Stubbs as the voice of Audrey II. It is a gruesome tale full of innocent fun, a nice choice for a change of pace. J.A.

Classic Video Choice
1975
Dog Day Afternoon
Starring Al Pacino
It's hard to believe that Dog Day Afternoon is based on a true story, so improbable is this tale of a bank heist gone wrong. Al Pacino plays Sonny, a robber of confused complexity, stealing to finance his lover's sex-change operation. Sidney Lumet directs this film with a feel for New York and the fleeting celebrity that television can create. The bank robbers and their hostages are portrayed with considerable realism amid unreal chaos. With Pacino's legendary performance Dog Day Afternoon is complete entertainment, it should be seen. J.A.

Mobsters
Starring Christian Slater and Patrick Dempsey
Mobsters is a disappointing movie. Starring Christian Slater and Patrick Dempsey, there is great promise in this story of "Lucky" Luciano, Meyer Lansky and "Bugsy" Seigal in their formative years. Sadly enough, the movie is brought crashing down by dialogue that is stereotypical at best and occasionally laughable. In the cinema, lush colors and stylish direction masked some of Mobsters' shortcomings. However, the small screen can't hide these limitations, revealing a confused film that is more style than substance. There are better mob films (Goodfellas, Bonnie and Clyde, Untouchables), so resist the temptation to rent this one.
J.A.

Hot Shots
1991
Starring Charlie Sheen
Hot Shots has no business being so funny. It is a barrage of blatant, predictable jokes combined with heavy handed parody that proves just too goofy to resist. This film, from one of the creators of Airplane, mostly lampoons Top Gun but also includes material at the expense of Dances with Wolves, Superman, The Fabulous Baker Boys and many others. Charlie Sheen is surprisingly funny and Lloyd Bridges is hilarious in their attempts trying to bring operation Sleepy Weasel to life. Hot Shots is stupid, pointless, inane, crazed, ridiculous and unbelievable. The perfect cure for the winter blues. J.A.

STEVEN KEATON IS DEAD

AN INTERVIEW WITH MICHAEL GROSS

by Tobin Streett

In town for some chit-chat about his new movie, Alan & Naomi, Michael Gross answers some questions about his career, his new movie and his . . . family ties.

After a career in which he'd played everything from traditional roles to drag queens, Michael Gross won the part of Steven Keaton in the hit TV series Family Ties. The seven year run of the show has undoubtedly left an impression with many of us that Michael Gross is Steven Keaton - the "Father of the Eighties."

But if you ask him, Gross will say that Steven Keaton is dead.

"I can virtually guarantee you that you will never see a Family Ties reunion. I think it would be tough to go back to the old neighborhood. I've done that before in Chicago, and the old neighborhood never looks quite the same. After seven years (and 175 episodes), we all felt the need to sort of spread out."

Though they've all gone in their separate directions, Michael still maintains friendships with the cast. But today, his excitement is focused on his new film, a vehicle which should carry him far from the typecasting he's experienced in recent years. Gross was pigeonholed into roles requiring a fatherly figure after Family Ties and he's trying to step out from that image. He confesses that after the demise of Ties, he was barraged with phone calls for parts requiring a fatherly touch.

"I think the problem with any actor is being locked into whatever you did last time - whatever that last time was - 'oh you're good at that, let's do another one of them' - whatever works they [producers] tend to want to exploit. Naturally, there's a worry that's going to happen. By and large, a lot of that's past because there were a couple of years there where I did traditionally get a lot of offers for fathers of kids that were in very much the same mold - sensitive fathers with children. Fortunately, there were these other things that came in."

> "I had my nose to the grindstone since my college days in the sixties when I was supposed to be kicking back. All my friends were going to Woodstock. I was going to summer stock."

One of those "things" is his new movie, Alan & Naomi. The film opened last weekend and should be a step in the right direction for Gross. It stars Lukas Haas and Vanessa Zaoui as two teenagers who befriend one another after their parents have forced them into what began as an unwanted relationship. Gross plays Alan's father Sol, who, in a supporting role, shepherds young Alan in this warm and moving story about human suffering and making the right choices. For Michael Gross, playing an older Jew was fun. Michael is one character actor who adapts to his characters with ease. He even gave himself a crash course in Yiddish in the process. He laughs about some of the roles he has had. "You have your Kevin Costners and then you have me. I play the drag queens or the balding, pear-shaped Jewish man." From the looks of things, seven years on Ties did everything but dull the acting talents of Gross. Not that he holds any resentment.

"Ultimately, it was when the writing became too tough for them that we canceled the show. It was the writers and the producers. Now the actors were not far behind. Tremors was right there fortunately at the end of Family Ties and a movie called the F.B.I. Murders, which I still did back when Family Ties was running - another 180 degree turn. I played sort of this psycho social killer, light years away from Steven Keaton. I said, [to the director] `this is not a corporate decision. You don't cast America's most popular Caucasian father as this killer.'"

So what's this ex-drag queen/ex-father actor doing now? In his early forties, Gross is returning from a six-month excursion which he attributes to "some sort of mid-life crisis."

"I've actually come off a six month hiatus. I stopped [working] in June because I kind of burned out. I called my agent one day and said `Let's talk again in 1992.' I was pushing myself a little too hard and right after the series ended, I felt the need to prove myself and run out there and do other things. I did Tremors immediately, some other television movies and Big Business with Bette Midler. Call it classical midlife crisis. It was a text book case. I walked away. My contract with my agent expired and I fired my press agent and went away to New Mexico. I went out there and took my oil paints and I swam in mountain streams - wound up becoming part owner in a railroad. After about six months of that and a lot of soul searching, I decided to ease back into this."

Gross was one of the hardest working character actors around when he started his career and eschews a certain attitude toward some of his peers. "I had my nose to the grindstone since my college days in the sixties when I was supposed to be kicking back. All my friends were going to Woodstock. I was going to summer stock. I had a job, I had a career, a direction, a focus and quite frankly, I thought less of them because they didn't. I've had this Puritan ethic since the day I was one and felt I couldn't justify my existence without this work.

Melanie Dunea

"What happened is I'm sort of back in again, but I was out for a while and that's the reason there's nothing right after this [Alan & Naomi], because I know it's going to be different, whatever it is. I'll tell you honestly; I grew tired of my obsession with the business and of the treadmill I was on. There was this narcissistic obsession. I got tired of the envy for the careers of people whose careers I thought were better than mine. I needed to settle some things. I would be less than honest if I said there weren't times when I dealt with my dark moods." Spending time in New Mexico seems to have helped the actor find himself.

Melanie Dunea

"I talked to some people who said `do at least 6 months.' So if the SAG strike happens in June, that's o.k."

For now, he's content spending time with his family. He confesses that it took him several months to learn how to relax again while in New Mexico. The toughest thing in the world for me to do is to lie in a hammock and read a book. It took me four of those six months to get to that point where I thought, It's okay to just be alive. I got a lot closer to my wife. I had more time for the kids, more time for my wife and that stuff has always gone on the back burner for me. I had a marriage operating at 60%. I wanted it at least at 90%."

So, who would he want to work with in the future? The kind of actors who Michael holds respect for are people like like Dustin Hoffman and Howard Hesseman. He said that he once saw Hesseman in a role in which he didn't recognize him until the end of the movie. "You go and see a John Wayne movie and his idea of a disguise is a patch. That's his character change. My philosophy, coming out of particularly repertory theater was that it's better not to be recognized. I don't believe actors should have images. I like the Dustin Hoffmans better. That's my taste. I want to see somebody and say, `Who's that guy?'

I think the greatest complement that you can give to an actor is `I didn't know who you were.' I think that's exciting." With Alan & Naomi,

TRAVEL

WASHINGTON, DC
THE TIME IS NOW

by Shawn Goodwin

Just how well do you know your nation's capital? Try some spontaneity, pack up your bags and head to DC for a weekend excursion. Jamaica, Cancun and carnival in Rio sound more appetizing? Well, DC might not offer that welcome respite from Boston's winter doldrums but there are several reasons why you might want to consider it.

Save money that would have gone to exorbitant air fares, deep sea fishing charters, SCUBA lessons and an endless supply of margaritas. Washington D.C. is a great place to take a vacation even if you don't have two weeks off from work. The beauty about Washington is that it's one vacation spot you can enjoy if you only have a few days or a weekend. The improper tourist can avoid the springtime throngs of tourists taking in the cherry blossom essence.as well as the suffocating mugginess during summer's peak visiting months.

DC actually has a good deal to offer the weary traveler in February. Where else would be more appropriate to join in the birthday celebrations of two of this country's greatest Presidents?

Guerilla Warfare (Picket Duty in Virginia), Albert Bierstadt, 1862 is on display at The National Gallery of Art.

Honor our 16th President's achievements of freeing the slaves and uniting the North and South, observed on February 12th, at the Lincoln Memorial for a wreath-laying ceremony and the reading of the Gettysburg Address. You may find it inspiring to return at night and check out the spectacular mirror image of both the Washington monument and the Capitol,.while ice skating on the Reflecting Pool.

On February 17th, Washington's birthday, the historic and grandiose Mount Vernon House is open to the public. There will be fife on the green and the obligatory wreath laying.

George Washington's Birthday Parade, taking place in old town Alexandria, Virginia is another way to jump into the festivities.

Both Mount Vernon and Alexandria are easy to reach and worthwhile excursions from DC. To get to Mount Vernon by car take any of the bridges over the Potamic into Virginia to the George Washington Memorial Parkway heading South and it will dump you at Mount Vernon. To get to Alexandria, take 14th St. South to 395 South out of downtown, go across the bridge and pick up Route 1 South and follow the signs. Old Town also boasts a slew of good restaurants, antique stores and shops on quaint cobblestone streets.

If you plan on just exploring the DC environs, the Smithsonian Museums (the world's largest museum complex) offers a diverse and impressive assortment, lining Washington's giant lawn, the Mall. All are well worth a visit. But if your time is limited, here are a few favorites.

Indulge in childhood fantasies at the Air and Space Museum. Learn how man mastered flight, see the famous Apollo 11 firsthand and treat yourself to an astronaut's dessert - freeze-dried ice cream.

A View of the Washington Monument from the Tidal Basin.

If you're into the arts, the Hirshorn Museum and Sculpture Garden is a treat. And the National Gallery of Art always has plenty of interesting and thought-provoking exhibits. Currently they are featuring Albert Biestadt, Art and Enterprise, a show of 78 paintings by this prominent American landscape artist. Also on display are the dramatic Photos of Walker Evans.

If you're fascinated by conspiracy theories and Oliver Stone's JFK has fueled these interests, take a tour of the FBI Building and learn how you can join the ranks.

Washington offers numerous great places to chow. Adams-Morgan is a fun place to walk the street and choose from an endless array of ethnic cuisines. The Khaber Pass offers outstanding Afghan food. Try the Lamb Kebob with whipped pumpkin and yogurt. And when you want to splurge for that special Valentines dinner date, Petitto's on Connecticut Ave. is a romantic and gastronomical delight. For reservations, call 667-5350.

The one thing you definitely don't want to miss while in Washington is a trip to the Vietnam Memorial. Two endless black granite walls bear the names of the fifty-some thousand lives lost in Vietnam. It is a powerful testament to our country's soldiers who gave their lives and much more to fight a war that has so vastly shaped and scarred the American psyche, indelibly etched in our history.

Your cheapest route to DC other than via your automobile is Amtrak. Prices run around $128 for a round trip ticket. But you may want to fork over some extra money for a sleeping car. Call (800) 872-7245 for prices and reservations. If you plan on flying, it's good to call around, but US Air usually offers the lowest fares.

Paris Comes to Boston

Buste au Corsage a Carreaux , Pablo Picasso, 1957, lithograph

by Jannette Tucker

Parisian history has made its way to Newbury Street. The Galerie Mourlot, whose parent company Ateliers Mourlot in Paris is celebrating its 140th anniversary, officially opened its doors at 119 Newbury Street on Jan. 16.

Along with its history, Galerie Mourlot brings big names to its walls. Mourlot sells original lithographs of Picasso, Chagall, Miro, Matisse and Leger. It is the first retail venture for the 140-year-old printing company.

Ateliers Mourlot made its debut in the art world (after printing beer and wine labels) when Pablo Piccaso walked into the print shop in 1937. "We finally got Piccaso to take a look at the shop," Galerie owner Eric Mourlot explained. "He began printing some of the most beautiful prints and started the wave of artists there." That wave of included Moore, Bacon, Dufy, Lichtenstein, Braque, Cocteau, Cathelin and Dali.

Mourlot, who represents the fourth generation of Mourlots to make the art world his business, runs the gallery with Director Sarah Hackett.

"We decided to open a gallery because we know a lot about the business but not about retail," he explained. "We needed to know what motivated people to buy what we're producing."

Mourlot was exposed to the lithograph business in his childhood in Paris, where he "was running around" his father's (Jacques) print shop, befriending the likes of Chagall and Miro. With such osmosis-like training in the business, Mourlot admits he did not prepare too much for his entrance into the world of retail.

"A lot of galleries don't always know what they're talking about," he said with caution. "For the gallery business, you have to have confidence in your taste and feel strongly about the artists you represent. We've been in business for 140 years. People need to understand why these lithographs are special, so I want to use the showroom for education as well."

Galerie Mourlot Associate Director Angela Folino helps take care of educating the viewers on the lithographs, which range in price from $1,200 to $21,000. For instance, Folino points out the Bon a Trie, an artist's signature that signals the last proof that the artist has looked over and approved the work before the series is printed.

The works at the Galerie will change constantly, but will concentrate on the 20th century works on paper by modern masters that have made the Mourlot name the most famous in the lithograph business. Art lovers are treated to such works as "Serpent a Lunette" by Spanish surrealist Joan Miro. His child-like approach shows his love for colors and movement in a simple yet powerful way. The Picassos, of course, make their own statement, but just down the wall you'll see Georg Braque's very Picasso-like "Helios V." Mourlot told a story that Picasso and Braque, equally inspired by each other, used to send their works to their gallery representative without signing them, having fun by forcing the gallery to decide whose was whose.

"I'm sure there are works by Piccaso that are labeled Braque and vice versa," Mourlot said with a laugh.

Knowledge such as this, stories passed from generation to generation, makes the Galerie Mourlot somewhat special in the greater scheme of Boston galleries. And that's exactly what brought Eric Mourlot to Boston.

"We felt that New York already had a lot of quality galleries - not that Boston doesn't," he explained. "But I think in New York we would have been just another gallery. I think in Boston we can do something special."

The Galerie Mourlot
Open Tues.-Sat. 10am-6pm,
Thurs. until 9pm and by appointment.

REVEALING THE FACES OF PAUL RICHARD

Melanie mDunea

Melanie mDunea

by Jannette Tucker

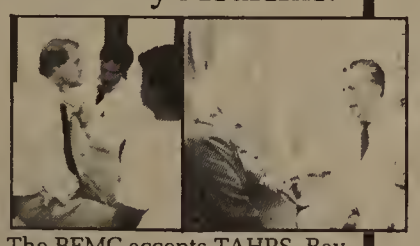
Multi-media artist Paul Richard has about as much job satisfaction as possible. When asked to describe the inspiration behind any of his works, he replies simply, "I'm just following my bliss, doing what I'm inclined to do."

Richard's inclinations lead him to painting, sculpture, silkscreening, liquid emulsion prints and video art. His video, the highly spiritual "The Blessed," features a dancer wearing only an aboriginal mask and can be viewed at the Starving Artists Gallery on Newbury Street. Before you go expecting the flash of MTV, understand that "The Blessed" is symbolism, echoing voices, faceless masks, aboriginal masks and enchantment with the human body. It is a statement, not a show. But don't bother asking Richard what statement it is that he is making. He won't tell you.

"I find when I give people the message, I often mislead them," he said. "It's better to interpret it in your own way. Yours might be more true than mine."

He will characterize his work as iconoclastic, yet religious. Experimental, yet traditional. In other words, it's what you think it is.

Richard's video was choreographed and written for video, not stage, so it has never been attempted live. Richard said he likes to interchange his media because they enhance each other. All of them focus on the human body - a crucifixion motif in his painting, sculptures of the body, videos of body. movement. Even the frames for his paintings are adorned with figures of the human body



"The reason I'm a multi-media artist is I find that each medium enhances the other," he explained. "I can progress in one medium by doing another. For instance, there are certain effects we achieved in the video that I found effective, like what they call 'ghosting.'"

"Ghosting" achieves an effect in movement where the shadow remains while the image moves on. This gives the viewer a feeling of serenity and adds to the overall religious undertones. The true nature of that religion remains subject to interpretation.

"I'm not religious in any major orthodox," Richard explained. "I'm religious in the sense of being a humanist."

A FASHIONABLE LUNCH

by Jannette Tucker

Fine dining, exquisite fashions and the symphony always make a great combination, and The Colonnade Hotel offers quite the package every Friday afternoon. Boston's most elegant international designs are showcased while dining on grilled Norwegian salmon and gulf shrimp.

Each show features international selections with models weaving throughout the tables of Cafe Promenade.

Parisian retailer Seta, who owns a store with the same name in Belmont, featured her European finds on Jan. 24. Prices hover in the $500 range for items with hand-embroidered sequins from West Germany, Greece, Italy, France, India and the United States.

Look for the fuschia/black combination, which Seta said is extremely popular among designers right now. Tasteful sequins, dress gloves and splashes of bold color are also popular this year.

Browns and taupes are making a comeback as women's business suits take on a neutral color but with plenty of flair and femininity. A touch of lace, embroidery and padding make an otherwise dull color shine.

The Colonnade fashion shows are noon to 1:30pm on Fridays. For information about the shows, call The Colonnade Hotel at 424-7000. For information about Seta High Fashion, 151 Belmont Street, call 484-6369.

Games People Play

Who said kids should have all the fun? Games are not just for kids, and no one knows that better than Games People Play, an adult-oriented game store at 1105 Mass. Ave. in Cambridge. The 18 year-old store supplies adults with challenging games to exercise the mind. "Games keep the mind working, and it's a viable form of social activity," said owner Carol Monica. "Plus, they're very challenging." Games People Play stocks everything from chess sets to word games, from sports games to monopoly in foreign languages. They even carry a Civil War game, complete with the exact weather conditions of the time, maps and supply areas. "I started it because there wasn't any place to buy adult games around," Monica said. "I think I'm the one." Games People Play is open Mon.-Wed. 10am-6pm, Thur. 10am-8pm, Fri. 10am-7pm and Sat. 10am-5pm. For more information call 492-0711.

Can you help me blow up this lamp?

The inflatable lamp has landed in Boston. Environmental artist Jon Goldman of Goldman Arts at 107 South Street designs inflatable media. Goldman has taken a twist on lamps, chairs, animals and other inflatable furniture that look fresh out of a Jetsons episode. Among his designs are the keyboard and hands that adorned the side of the Lenox hotel, the 60-foot monster crab built for the crab fest at the Parker House Hotel and Zelda, The Conehead's Sister - a First Night celebration character. Items such as the sawtooth lamp light instantly and inflate via a built-in fan. For more information call 423-6606.

How Much is that Hippo on the Menu?

Seymour Kaubalz, our specialty foods critic, is extremely concerned about the upcoming Game Fest Week to be held at The Harvest Restaurant in Harvard Square from February 25 to March 1. After serving appetizers like "Duck Tongue" and "Grilled Raccoon Loin with pepino melon and corn salsa," Head Chef John Claussen will serve up a selection of game from around the world. Claussen has prepared a menu that boasts Antelope, Emu, Beaver, Buffalo, Caribou, Hippopotamus, Lion, Deer and Kangaroo. Although he's pictured above with a lovely little catch, don't worry, he didn't open fire in the Franklin Park Zoo. Assistant Manager Stacie Heinpze says, "No one is shooting anything endangered and we're going to try not to waste any animal parts." That's evident in their appetizer selections. But Seymour remains upset. "I'm afraid that the next time I go to the zoo, the only thing left to look at will be the Pigeons. But maybe I'll be able to find them on the dessert section of the Harvest's menu. I hope they will exercise caution with their future menu selections. If not, we'll find Scooby Doo paté next week." Call the Harvest Restaurant for reservations and more information at 492-1115.

STAGE NOTES

by Nancy Leonard

The American Repertory Theatre will have two world premieres as part of its 1992 New Stages Series. "Media Amok," written by Christopher Durang, will run March 26 - April 26, and "Oleanna," written and directed by David Mamet, will play May 1 - May 24. Performances will be at the Hasty Pudding Theatre. The first is a satire on our times, reflected in the world of vicious talk show television. The Mamet play focuses on a university professor and one of his students, educational theories, and a major career and life crisis. Tickets for both productions are now on sale, with prices ranging from $17 to $33. For information, call the box office at 617-547-8300.

The ART also announced that Ron Daniels, who directed "Hamlet" earlier this season, and is now in rehearsal with "The Seagull", has become Associate Artistic Director of the Company. According to Robert Brustein, who remains as the Artistic Director, Mr. Daniels' post is a new addition at the ART. Both men will share the leadership of the Institute for Advanced Theatre Training, now that Richard Riddell has decided to move on. Mr. Daniels will supervise acting and directing programs. Mr. Brustein will oversee dramaturgy-playwriting programs.

The Harvard Native American Program will present two staged readings of "The Indolent Boys", a new play by Pulitzer Prizewinning Kiowa author N. Scott Momaday. Performances will be on Friday, February 7, at 8 p.m., and on Saturday, February 8, at 3 p.m. at Harvard University's Agassiz Theatre. An audience discussion will follow Saturday's matinee. The play, Momaday's first, is based on a historic incident in 1891 at the Kiowa Boarding School in Oklahoma. The cast includes Native American actors from the United States and Canada. For information and reservations, call 617-495-4912. Advance tickets also are available at Harvard University's Sanders Theatre Box Office.

MISALLIANCE - SHAW DONE RIGHT

by Rachel Stern

The A.R.T.'s production of Misalliance succeeds so utterly in animating the play Shaw subtitled "A Debate in One Sitting," that one begins to wish Shaw had written dramas a tad less active. In a tour de force of stereotype-bashing, David Wheeler directs his company as through a whirlwind. Even the scenery moves. From the opening moment when we find Johnny Tarleton reading on a swing in his fathers glass house, through numerous gender-neutral lift to the final tableau vivant, the only thing moving faster than the audiences eyes are the actors mouths. Shaw has a lot to say and he says it all in Misalliance hear it or no. You probably won't catch every quote, quip and witticism because you'll be laughing too loud. Shaw himself complained that one audience "added twenty-five minutes to the schedule . . . by their reckless bursts of applause and laughter." The play, written in 1910, is ostensibly about the intended "misalliance", between Hypatia Tarleton, daughter of a thriving underwear merchant, and Bentley Summerhays, the goofy but intelligent son of a degenerate aristocrat.

Since its premiere, critics have asked whether it is a play at all, or merely a diatribe on the ills of society. While its philosophical musings encompass diverse subjects from eugenics to Liberty, the plot spins around chasing its tail, and at the end not very much has progressed. All of this sounds terribly dull, but in fact the show is a howl, not just for Shaw connoisseurs and not least due to the daring, almost slapstick choreography.

Central to this impression is Stephanie Roth, whose Hypatia could be nicknamed "Hyperatia". Ms Roth is exquisite to the eye and ear, but could bring herself and the audience closer to her real character if she turned down the voltage.

Candy Buckley, in the role of the Polish acrobat, aviatrix and feminist mouthpiece, Lina Szczepanowska, manages to bring subtlety to a character written dangerously broad. Derek Smith, as Bentley, is exhaustingly funny. In the center of the whirlwind is John Tarleton, philosopher, philanthropist and underwear manufacturer. He is Lear and Fool all in one - the man who must relinquish his daughter to whichever alliance she chooses. A brilliantly-written character, Tarleton is flawlessly played by Jeremy Geidt, an actor whose command of his craft is so complete that it would be a lie to say he plays anything; Geidt embodies his character. A great actor can do that with tragedy, but Geidt is a success with comedy.

Misalliance is known as a difficult play to stage, but Wheeler and his set designer, Derek McLane, manage not merely to tame the beast, but to make him dance. The run is through March 7, in repertory with The Seaqull, ticket information at 547-8300.

This Shirley Valentine Steals Hearts

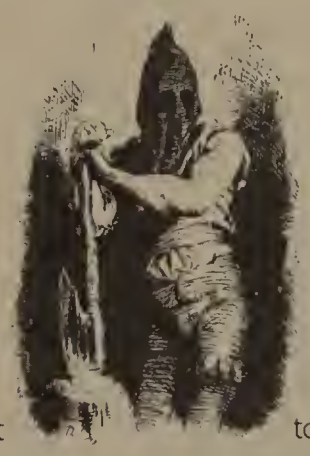
by Nancy Leonard

Tina Packer is best known hereabouts as the artistic director of Shakespeare & Company, the Berkshire-based acting troupe she founded in 1978. But before that, she was an actress in Great Britain - graduating from the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts, and performing at the Royal Shakespeare Company. So, when a benefit reading of Willy Russell's "Shirley Valentine" at the Gloucester Stage Company rekindled her old interests, it was perfectly natural to mount the one-character work at her home base in Lenox. She developed the role there last summer to wide acclaim, and now brings the production to the Charles Playhouse. The acclaim, it turns out, is wholly warranted.

The warm and winning play is a perfect marriage of performer and material. Ms. Packer is simply wonderfull Shirley Valentine is an unhappily married, 42-year-old working-class housewife in Liverpool. Her two grown children are living elsewhere, and her husband Joe ignores her when he's not hurling insults or making demands. Reduced to conversing with the kitchen wall - which she delightfully personalizes - Shirley is keenly aware that life has been disappointing. It has failed to deliver even her modest desires - a bit of travelling, a loving family - but at mid-life, she is terrified to leave for unknown alternatives. Things change abruptly when Joe throws his plate of food at Shirley. She decides to accept her friend's offer of a free trip to Greece, and after three weeks of secret preparations, flees to adventure. It is a journey of self-discovery. Unexpectedly on her own and savoring the foreign environment, Shirley discards the "terrible weight of her unused life," and reclaims her self-esteem. No longer just wife and mother, she becomes, once again, the spirited and youthful Shirley Valentine.

Russell's play deftly interweaves humor and introspection, and expertly confounds the time line. What is essentially a monologue becomes an engrossing, fully scaled play. In the first scene, we are prepared for the plate-throwing incident with accounts of Joe's inflexibility over the years, and Shirley's confession that she impulsively fed his steak that afternoon to a "vegetarian bloodhound."

The next scene is on the day of departure, but the conversational thread quickly transports us through Joe's outrage, followed by three weeks of often-hilarious preparations. After intermission, the sun-tanned vacationer pops up on a Greek island and we learn that she's had over a month of liberating adventures. Ms. Packer's Shirley Valentine is a large, buxom woman of irresistible charm and up-to-date sensibilities. Her plight is all the more touching as she's stuck in a generational rut, not merely a personal one. Engaging in a conspiracy with the audience, the much-abused Shirley draws strength from the diverse incidents and ruminations - even as she spins out a comic and compelling tale.



The actress skillfully impersonates the varied characters dotting the landscape, including a destructive headmistress, carping British tourists, and a lapsed feminist friend. The funniest segment involves daughter Milandra's return home. The most touching is a recent encounter with a childhood rival. And you can't help but rejoice at Shirley's exhilarating spunk and liberation. It's a wonderful performance.

Patrick Swanson's direction smoothes the transitions in the script and energizes the evening in the process. He's taken the familiar and made it very fresh. Stephen D. Ball's first-act kitchen design is nothing to revel at, but his sparsely appointed, rock-strewn beach is a bit more successful. Lenore Doxsee's lighting is average and appropriate for the play. Andrea Zax's costumes are fine for the purposes.

Although there's little here that's new, the evening is dynamic and consistently engaging. Tina Packer is riveting and her Shirley is a wonder. We are fortunate to have her in our midst

THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN'S RESTAURANT REVIEW

PAOLO

by Al Stankus

Tucked cozily in a space that some might correctly dub romantic, Paolo has quietly become one of the city's new dining stars. Named for its owner, Paolo DiBenedetti, this intimate restaurant and small bar are set below the European Restaurant causing a dining companion to question the choice: "You mean we're eating under a pizza joint?"

However, after one descends the 14 steps and enters Paolo, all comparisons to its neighbors cease. The room is refined without being rarified. Crisp white linens, dim lights and fresh flowers set the tone.

Fronting a stone wall, the last visible vestige of the building's original foundation, is a magnificent Steinway piano. It's here, from Wednesday through Saturday, that local legend Ray Santisi entertains diners and late night nibblers and imbibers with his seemingly unlimited repertoire that moves between Tin Pan Alley standards and jazz classics like "Lush Life" and "Waltz For Debby."

The current rage, focaccia arrives on the basis of the menu and wine list. Indulge in these warm wedges of what's essentially a very good bread, topped with a blend of coarse salt, olive oil and various fresh herbs.

Although its location, name, and the "focaccia welcome" may suggest that Paolo is firmly Italian, the kitchen savvy here is far more universal.

The Maine crab cakes ($8.75), served as an appetizer, are fried in a classic Chesapeake Bay style, stuffed with New England flare and rest in a mustard creme sauce that smacks of a Euro-California palate. Pan sauteed until very crisp, the crab cakes are artfully dressed in a lemon and garlicky concoction. The crab and some bread crumbs are joined by corn kernels, providing a complementary play of textures and the accompanying salad is sprinkled with slivers of Parmesan and a pair of criss-crossed anchovies. You'll come back for this one.

A dish that makes an ideal late night bite is the "eggplant sandwich" ($4.25). But before you say "I'm not eating any sub when I go out," think of the verb "to sandwich" instead of the noun. Thin slices of crisp eggplant "sandwich" prosciutto, fresh mozzarella, fresh basil, and tomatoes - a simply wonderful little concoction.

Dennis Stein

Although the menu boasts fresh pasta, I have an inkling that Paolo's "fresh pasta" is machine-extruded and not the product resulting from the more labor-intensive method of drying the dough on the rack before it's cut. This is only said because in the pasta dishes which employed noodles as opposed to sheets, the ribbons of pasta were more toothsome than feathery. In texture there was a resemblance to chow foon, the thick Chinese style noodles.

"Freshness" aside, the dish made with the wide pappardelle noodles and succulent slices of grilled garlicky lamb tossed with goat cheese, tomatoes and a light mix of rosemary and olive oil is a complex of.sweet and smoky with a touch of herb. The house lasagna eschews the ubiquitous layered version for one that rolls the dough around various chesses, prosciutto, and wilted arugula. Quite nice.

Among the mainstays are the lemon sole and chicken breast, two pan-fried dishes of sublime simplicity. More hearty is the rich veal chop finished with wild mushrooms in an intense reduction of stock and Cognac.

In addition to the five listed main courses ($14.50-$18.75), there are nightly specials (most $16-$18.50) that on our visits were worth checking out.

Specials have included a pan-seared duck breast tasting of an oven finish with its delicious tangerine and casis sauce.

Paolo's wine list avoids the pedestrian and while generally priced at double the retail also contains some decent buys and plenty of real charmers. For bargains, there's the 1985 Bollinger Grande Anee Champagne ($65) while the 1985 Chianti produced by Roca Delle Macie ($35) is both a bargain and charmer. Made from grapes grown in but a single vineyard, Di Fizzano, it's a delicious bottle that after the initial smooth sip later reveals remarkable depth and complexity.

Service manages to be both friendly and professional, even to those who venture in past normal dining hours and simply want to listen to the music over a bottle of wine and a shared order of pasta.

In its overall style, level of service, and subdued sophistication, a night at Paolo's might be as urbane as it gets in current Boston.

BUDGET BITES

AMRHEINS a Southie Favorite

by Meg Worden & Peter McNamara

Question: what do Dapper O'Neil, Southie's eclectic new residents, the police of Precinct C-6 and young South Boston couples on a budget have in common? Answer: they are all regulars at Amrheins, a restaurant just about everyone has heard of, but which tends to be unjustly neglected by people from outside its immediate area. Founded in 1890, this friendly, welcoming neighborhood eatery is still going strong - hardly surprising given the generous portions and the pleasantly low prices. It is also incredibly easy to reach via the red line Broadway T stop. Frustrated drivers should note there is ample free parking here).

There are two spacious dining rooms: an old fashioned publike one combining comfortable roomy booths with tables, the other (our favorite) has booths, and the walls are adorned with blowups of old black and white photos highlighting the career of that unforgettable rogue, James Michael Curley. The decor reminded us strongly of a turn of the century Parisian restaurant - something about the dark wood of the booths and doors, the high ceilings, and the simulated gaslight gave it a very European flavor.

As you might expect in this neighborhood, the food is basic old fashioned American (Yankee pot roast, chicken pot pie, broiled schrod . . .), plus a variety of Italian specialties. The extensive menu has dinner entree prices ranging from $5.95-$11.95 with many priced below $10.00 and come with soup or salad. Amrheins also offers two for one specials Monday through Wednesdays for just $12.95 including a choice of soup or salad.

So how did the food measure up? To be honest, we have to admit that we have had better food elsewhere; some items were quite good, but there were some disappointments, too, as well as several near misses. Even so, we came away feeling positive and liking the restaurant very much.

Appetizers we sampled included a combination platter of fried zucchini, onion rings, mozzarella sticks and chicken wings for $4.95. None of these were greasy and both the zucchini and the mozzarella were good., with a nice crisp batter. The onion rings weren't quite hot enough, so their batter seemed a bit heavy and soggy. A rather acidy tomato-based dipping sauce served as an accompaniment. The wings were excellent, tasting smoky, meaty and juicy while the seafood stuffed mushrooms ($3.95) were disappointing, however; the seafood was missing in the dry stuffing and the accompanying sauce was floury and nondescript.

Amrheins
80 West Broadway, South Boston, tel. 268-6189. Hours: Open daily for lunch and dinner Credit cards: All major Reservations: only for 6 or more Handicapped: Restrooms not yet accessible, though dining areas are.

The soup of the day was onion; it was unduly salty, and we strongly suspect that it came out of a can. The salad was better: a pleasant combination of romaine (such a relief from the ubiquitous iceberg lettuce!), spinach, carrot, green and red cabbage, tomato and cucumber. Putting the two for one menu to the test, we selected chicken marsala (regularly priced at $8.45), and seafood pie (not on the regular menu). The chicken dish comprised an enormous piece of a perfectly cooked, moist, tender boneless chicken breast with a mountain of somewhat overcooked, underseasoned linguini garnished with chunks of ham and mushrooms. The marsala was also a little understated. We were told the seafood pie contained lobster, shrimp, scallops and schrod in a Newburg sauce, topped with a seafood stuffing. We found many scallops in the pie but other seafood ingredients were a little harder to find. The dry topping resembled that of the mushroom appetizer. The pie came with a choice of rice or french fries and we opted for rice, which proved to be perfectly cooked, and had a nice "nutty" flavor.

We sampled a couple of desserts, too. The blueberry pie ($1.95) was rather disappointing as the promised "wild blueberries mixed with a very rich base" turned out to be a rather gluelike blueberry mixture in a decidedly leaden crust. The strawberry shortcake ($2.45) was a gigantic concoction that rapidly dissolved into a rather odd looking "soup", but despite appearances, was very "moreish".

Stick to the plainer dishes. So many are in the budget bite category (even London broil is just $7.95), you don't even need to confine yourself to the two for one specials. However there are some other bargains that you should know about: on Saturdays from 11am-3pm there is a traditional roast turkey two for one dinner for $11.95 and a children's lunch menu for just 99 cents, while on Sundays a traditional buffet brunch is served, costing $7.95 for all you can eat. We can guarantee you'll never go hungry at Amrheins.

Boston Wine Festival

by Al Stankus

Three years ago, when the local economy was warmer, the Boston Harbor Hotel held its first Boston Wine Festival. Twelve vintners and 16 wine-food events were represented in the modest inaugural.

This year, beginning on January 10 and running through April 10, 26 wineries and 41 events will make up the 1992 Boston Wine festival.

In just three years, this marriage of food and wine has become a premier event in Boston's wide-ranging wine community. As it's always been, the Festival is a showcase for California wineries and wine personalities. Such California stalwarts as Chalone, Shafer, Cakebread, Spottswoodo, Qupe, and Cloe Du Bois will share time this year with the Wines of Italy from February 18-21. Spanish Wines will take over from March 24-27.

Although the Festival has a rare wine auction (April 10) and a number of seminar-tastings, the hotel's Managing Director, Francois-Laurent Nivaud notes: "The Centerpiece of the Festival will be the food and wine pairing menus created by our Executive Chef, Daniel T. Bruce to delight even the most discerning bon vivants." Bruce is a master at marrying wine with food. No matter how much wine you taste, the only way to truly appreciate it is to set it off with wine.

Months before the Festival begins, almost as soon as the wine lineup is announced, Bruce begins tasting the wines that will be showcased. He compares notes with those of the hotel's Executive Manager Jim Carmody and festival consultant Peter Sagansky.

From this meeting of minds and tastebuds, a four course meal for each winery dinner is planned. Bruce elaborated: "Each course complements specific flavor components in its accompanying wine. And each course during a particular dinner relates to the others, just as each winery may have more than one wine, but projects a consistent style."

Such as last year at the Chateau Montelena dinner when he paired their Chardonnay with a lobster consumme. This was followed by medallions of venison napped with a silky reduction of Port infused with some wild mushrooms that was served with the vineyard's wonderful Cabernet Sauvignon.

Before and after each course, someone from the winery, generally the wine-maker, will talk about the wine you are about to taste or just sampled and then answers questions. At meal's end, Chef Bruce exits the kitchen and talks abut the food. Rarely are diners afforded such an opportunity to educate their palate and satisfy their curiosity at one sitting.

To whet the appetite, for the Cakebread Cellars dinners on March 2 and 3, a sweet pea stuffed rabbit leg will be served with Cakebread's 1990 Chardonnay; on March 10 and 11, when the wines from Frog's Leap and Spottswoode will be featured, Chef Bruce will team a grilled salmon fillet served over lemon grass and quinoa with the 1990 Frog's Leap Sauvignon Blanc and follow up with pan fried venison and crisp onion rings to go along with Spottswoode's luscious 1988 Cabernet Sauvignon.

It's a Festival with a wide breadth. For the confirmed cenophile, there's the opportunity to taste an impossible-to-find vintage. And for those with more modest ambitions, the Festival is all about learning more about wine and food.

Events range in price from $15 to $125, with most wine and food dinners priced at $75. The cost includes all wine, food, tax, and gratuities. For information and reservations, call the Boston Harbor Hotel's special Wine Festival phone, 330-9355. The Boston Harbor Hotel is located at 70 Rowes Wharf.

A taste of the Pacific Rim" is how the menu at Mimi's Oriental Grill describes the food at this new Cambridge restaurant at 950 Massachusetts Ave., tel. 354-1665. Incorporating just about every Asian cuisine, the menu features a fascinating range of dishes, from Formosa squid with fresh basil to Korean yaki niku beef and Mongolian barbecued lamb. Grilled items are a specialty, using a variety of woods to enhance the flavor. Hours are 11:30am-10:30pm (11:30pm, Fri-Sat); Full liquor license. Reservations are accepted.

The Copley Square Restaurant opened three weeks ago at 549 Boylston St., Boston, tel. 424-0014. The restaurant is run by the Mamakos and Klidaras families whose considerable experience was gained in local seafood restaurants. Downstairs, which is a cafeteria, features sandwiches, pizzas and home-made entrees, many of them Greek, like spinach pie, moussaka, pastitsio and baked lamb, plus home-made desserts including baklava, galactoboureko and Greek rice pudding. The upstairs features a full service restaurant, and the menu emphasizes seafood, pasta and grilled meats. Except for T-bone steak, all prices are under $10. Breakfast is offered weekdays, and brunch on weekends. Hours (which may change, so call ahead) are: downstairs 7:00am-9:00pm Mon-Sat, 9:00am-3:00pm Sun; upstairs 7:00am-12:00am Mon-Sat, to 9:00pm Sun.

Help celebrate the first annual Boston Wine Expo on February 8-10 at the World Trade Center. The one day admission fee of $25 includes a Grand Walk-Around Tasting. There will also be seminars and formal tastings, though these involve additional fees. Dozens of wineries will be participating, helping make this a wine lover's dream come true. For information, call Wineworks at (508) 448-9219; general admission tickets are available at selected wine stores, or can be ordered by calling 1-800-828-7080.

At the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts, new classes are starting up and include Sweets From the Heart on Feb. 8, Breads (in two sessions) starting Feb. 15, and a four session series, Provincial French, commencing Feb. 6. For information, call 354-3836.

Lion, black bear, emu, raccoon and wild boar, not to mention various types of antelope, game birds and venison will be on the menu during the Harvest's upcoming game festival. It begins on February 25 with a 5 course Hunter's Feast tasting dinner for $55. A selection of different game dishes will be featured each subsequent evening through March 1. For reservations, call 492-1115. 44 Brattle Street, Cambridge.

Bread and Circus, the local chain of wholefood supermarkets recently introduced some new, exclusive private label pastas, fruit spreads and ciders. The eight varieties of egg-free whole wheat pasta include garlic herb and cheese raviolini, onion dill and tofu agnolotti and cheese tortellinis with spinach and walnuts. Four organic and seven all-natural non organic fruit spreads are available in flavors like wild blueberry, strawberry and apricot. The ciders are made from alar free apples, and in addition to pure apple, seasonal berry combinations are offered. For information, call 964-7826 or 332-5314.

A news flash as we go to press: Amsterdam's, one of Newport's classiest restaurants (and a personal favorite) is coming to Boston. Tentative opening date is February 15 (call 426-1111 to confirm). The location is 54 Arlington Street (at Arlington and Stuart Streets). Watch this spot for further updates.

A few years ago, Boston was abuzz with bands just waiting to break out out of the local pond and make it into the mainstream. Some groups like the Pixies and Throwing Muses made a huge splash, especially in Europe, while others like O Positive, Figures On the Beach and Face to Face failed to cause a ripple outside of city limits. The Heretix fell somewhere in between, neither causing a tsunami nor landing headfirst on the beach.

Signing a deal with Island Records soon after they took top honors at 1988's WBCN Rock and Roll Rumble, the Heretix released their debut A.D. to strong critical acclaim. Containing the heavily-rotated "Sheriff" and their early signature song "Mad Donna," they proved that they could harness their powerful live performance onto vinyl without losing their edge. The 1990 follow-up Gods and Gangsters confirmed their grip on the Boston scene with "My Head" and "Heart Attack."

The Heretix suddenly found themselves dropped from Island when it was absorbed into PolyGram Distribution, just when their popularity began to venture outside their home turf. "When PolyGram bought Island Records, just about all of the American bands were dropped," guitarist Brian Hill explained. "We unfortunately were one of the bands to get cut." Among the others whom PolyGram corporate insiders felt weren't worth the extra money were the Buck Pets and Dino, two drastically different but widely accessible bands.

Although being dropped from their label dampened the band's spirits, it didn't drown their faith in the music world. "It was good firsthand experience to learn about how the big businesses are run," replied vocalist Ray Lemieux. "But it didn't really diminish our attitude about playing music. Instead, it gave us an incentive to work for ourselves. It's almost like going to school, trying to read how to do all this stuff yourself. It made us work harder. It made us work together."

Instead of wallowing in disappointment, Ray, Brian, bassist Eric Hill and drummer Marvin Huffman began to work on their third album and the first to be released independently. The result, Continuous Soft Hits on the Head, released this past November, marks not only the return of the Heretix but also the creation of their own ABW Record label. "It stands for Agitated Black Woman," said an embarrassed Brian. "We were thinking about how much we liked Simple Minds before they had an agitated black woman singing backup. The other name that we thought up was 'Satan's Little Helpers', but for some reason, ABW stuck."

The new album, which has a harder edge than its predecessors, brings you deeper into their rock and roll heresies. While the earlier albums were a balanced mixture of acoustic and electric, Continuous Soft Hits... is predominantly an electric album. "There's only two acoustic songs on this record," explained Ray. "I've just decided to play a lot more electric. While we were touring the country, I felt that I had more fun playing the harder songs. . . songs that rip the speakers out."

As the music gets a little more aggressive, so has the legion of Heretix fans. "They're getting more violent with each show," laughed Ray. "They're getting louder and more vocal, and that's very good. It's kinda fun because they harass us almost as much as we harass them."

Although Boston is their home, they want to emulate the game plan of the Pixies and Throwing Muses by attacking the music scene via Europe. But the factors such as time and money are beating heavily on their backs. "We just got done talking to six distributors and other people over there," explained Ray. "It's a lot of work, and the phone calls aren't exactly cheap. But it's all going in a great direction."

Now that they're back in the open with a new album and a bunch of gigs saturating Boston, the Heretix are heading towards the mainstream again. Since Nirvana have opened the gates for grunge rock, a lot of bands are jumping in, hoping to take advantage of the current. But the Heretix are not one of them. "The manager of [A&M artists] the Milltown Brothers said that we were really different," replied Brian with a smirk. "But he said that since Nirvana was becoming popular in Europe, maybe we'd have a chance. It's funny how closed-minded they are over there, thinking in terms of trends."

Boston's reception to the new album has been pretty good so far. "BCN just added [the first single] 'My Favorite Hooker' [onto the playlist] which is wonderful of them, considering they are a classic hits station," added Brian. "BCN is doing great stuff by playing local music. In other cities like New York, that doesn't happen. Touring around really made me realize how much I love Boston. Where else can you listen to great radio stations, especially college radio? Boston blows away so many cities."

The guitar grunge current is picking up again, thanks to bands like Nirvana, Teenage Fan Club and Ratcat. But it doesn't seem that the Heretix are following the same flow. They have the originality to stand on their own and take the dive into the mainstream by themselves, and their Boston fans are behind them all the way. The waves should be crashing very soon.

ALL FUNKED UP

by Jannette Tucker

What's the definition of White Trash? Letting your kids crawl around on the floor at McDonald's? Or wearing Bermuda shorts with knee-highs and sandals?

None of the above!

White Trash only comes in one form: a funked up heavy metal horns band from Queens. White Trash (vocalist Dave Alvin, guitarist Ethan Collins, bassist Aaron Collins and drummer Mike Caldarella) actually define garage funk. Turn up the bass and let it rip.

White Trash, complete with the Badass Brass three-man horn section, grooved its way through the night, Fishbone-style, at Axis on Jan. 22. They're still on the road supporting their debut album White Trash (Elektra) with their MTV buzz bin favorite "Apple Pie." They are one of the tightest live bands around today. Somehow they managed spunk and funk while sounding as tight live as they do on record.

White Trash is one of the few bands out there who actually have feeling. They play as if they're in someone's garage and cutting loose. They slam dance, dive into the crowd and have a damn good time. Alvin, who struts a la Steven Tyler across the stage, screams his James Brown-like "Hueaaay!" and "Boom chaca la" as he feels the grooves. Otherwise known as soul.

As White Trash slammed through the funk on songs such as "The Crawl," their new single, the audience was treated to the best horn section since Fishbone. The band boogies so hard they have to come up for air. They chicken-walk across the stage, slam dance with each other, flail around in frenzies and just plain jam. Infectious energy!

In direct contrast, opener Attraction was. . . well, they sucked. Fatal attraction was more like it. Their feeble attempt at Cheap Trick's "Surrender" was the only positive thing, and that's only saying something for their taste in bands. These Slaughter wannabe's actually did a fine imitation of that pop metal band. But let's face it - who wants to be Slaughter?

MUSIC

THE SIGNIFICANT OTHER ROOM

by Thomas M. Ullman, Jr.

Most nights of the week, the Other Room at Boylston's Restaurant in Chestnut Hill is dominated by a big-screen TV, stockmarket quotes and the executive crowd. But on Fridays, the big-screen is shut off, suits are replaced by casual threads and the music of the moment is on tap. Such was the scene on January 24th when the George Schuller Quartet played to a full house. Led by drummer Schuller, the foursome included Miles Donahue on sax and trumpet, Bruce Gertz on acoustic bass and featured guest Kurt Rosenwinkel on guitar.

After a brief opening by Donahue during a performance of "Music," Rosenwinkel flowed into a meandering solo, closed gently by Donahue. Benny Golson's "Stablemates" was the next offering. Once again, Donahue helped open, then turned the spotlight over to Rosenwinkel. He took the tune on a spirited ride and handed the reins over to Donahue who put the spurs to it, taking us over a few high jumps for good measure. Gertz and Schuller followed with galloping, energetic riffs before the horses went back to the barn.

Gertz primed the group for his "Red Yellow Green," a tune which seemed to march along, whipped to its pace by Donahue's energetic blowing. The answer from the guitar was spare but no less energetic and Donahue held the energy level to the end, braking only at the terse rendition of Joe Henderson's "Inner Urge."

Rosenwinkel can be heard on an upcoming release from Human Feel on the GM label this month. He has also contributed on a new Gary Burton disc, due out this fall.

This Friday Night Series deserves a good amount of attention because it took George Schuller about a year to organize and started last August. It has already featured local favorites such as Grey Sargent and Herb Pomeroy and has Fred Hersch and Hal Crook billed for upcoming shows. It's free, relaxed and worth your time. On Route 9 in Chestnut Hill; 731-6200.

THE BLAKE BABIES STRETCH THEIR ANTENNA

by Jon Michael Procopio

In the past few years, Boston's own Blake Babies have become a staple of college radio, releasing critically acclaimed records and developing a loyal following throughout the country. Yet, at a seemingly high point in their popularity, they've decided to take a break and work on separate projects. While lead singer Juliana Hatfield works in Boston on her solo album Hey Babe (forthcoming on Mammoth Records), guitarist John Strohm and drummer Freda Love have moved back to their homestate of Indiana and started Antenna, which includes Zero Boys' guitarist Vess and bassist Jake Smith (formerly of the mod band Steve Kowalski). Antenna's recently released debut Sway (Mammoth), the original name of the band before another band threatened to sue, combines the strength of Strohm's songwriting with a variety of musical styles that melt into something unique and beautiful.

"We were at a point with the Blake Babies where we didn't know what to do next," said Strohm via telephone from Indiana. "Either we were going to sign a big major label deal and do a record like that or take a hiatus, which is what we chose to do." The roots of the band actually began to grow from Strohm's desire to develop new songs through their completion, writing both the music and the lyrics. In the Blake Babies, he had focused mainly on the music while Hatfield wrote the bulk of the lyrics. "I had all these songs that I wanted to do something with," said Strohm who had played these songs to Hatfield before their East Coast tour. Unfortunately, only two of the songs, "All I Need" and "Say a Prayer," made it into the Blake's live playlist. "I was a little frustrated by the fact that we were only doing two of these new songs," he continued. "I turned around and sent the demo to Mammoth [the Blake's record label] and they said, 'Here's some money. Go make a record,' which was very cool of them."

The resulting album Sway delivers thirteen songs which span the musical gamut of styles and subjects. From the pop-ish funk of "All I Need" to the Harrison-esque guitar chime of "I Cast Away Demons" to the eloquent beauty of "Snakes," Antenna deliver an album that is as interesting to listen to as it is enjoyable. "There are lots of things I wanted to do with [the album]," said Strohm. "The big problem I had with Sunburn [the Blake Babies' last full-length release] was the production was kind of 'samey'. I knew I could tell [producer Paul Mahern] some really off-the-wall ideas and he'd follow-up."

Strohm's strong ability of incorporating other artists' songs into his own work may strike a familiar chord, not unlike that of the trend in rap music. "I like the idea of taking pieces of old songs and regenerating them," he said. "But I think it would be hard and potentially cheesy to try to incorporate a lot of samples in our songs. It's totally full of references. Anybody who is a record collector or has an encyclopedic knowledge of pop music is going to have a field day."

So what lies in the future for Antenna? "We want to try to separate ourselves from the massive genre of guitar bands that's going on right now. We're going to make another record in May and we have all the songs written for it. It's going to be really different." While he hasn't ruled out the possibility of working with Hatfield again, Strohm does admit that "the future of the Blake Babies is kind of nebulous at this point." Although Boston's Blake Babies following may be disappointed with this, Strohm remains hopeful. "I'm really confident that Boston will be a good market for [Antenna]." With albums as good as Sway and recent exhilarating live performances at T.T. the Bear's and NYC's CBGB's, Antenna deserve greater reception not only in Boston and Indiana, but throughout the nation as well.

Wing Your Way to Buffs

Dennis Stein

by Tobin Streett

Buff's Pub sounds like the sort of place that you'd find on Cape Cod. It attracts a nighttime crowd of 20-something preppies who wouldn't look out of place in a Chatham bar. But Buff's is located in Newton Corner, a far cry from the beaches of the Cape.

It's a small place, with lots of wood and a buffalo head on the wall guarding the tables below. The buffalo provided inspiration for the name of the pub. "A friend of the owner shot a buffalo 12 years ago and the head is in here," says daytime Manager Tom Connelly.

Buff's has acquired a dichotomous reputation as a place to party, yet that holds a high regard for the safety of its patrons. "Designated drivers get free cokes or non-alcoholic drinks because they're the ones being responsible. We don't serve shots either. People just get drunk when we serve them. It's the same reason why we close early - to keep the neighborhood happy," says Connelly. Buff's has set a good example for other area drinking establishments and hasn't lost their clientele.

Many bars in Boston are mislabeled as "pubs" - a short label for overcrowded tourist traps. But in the true meaning of the word, Buff's is indeed a place to meet. They have maintained a reputation of a neighborhood bar even though many customers don't live nearby. Connelly reasons, "A lot of our regulars are within walking distance but we do have customers who don't live here. Even though we've maintained a reputation as a neighborhood bar, people drive in to try the wings."

These aren't your ordinary wings. They're the best in town. According to Connelly, "the buffalo wings here are the reason why Buff's is so popular. The wings and the food . . . and the nice bartenders."

It's interesting that he would attribute the popularity of Buff's to the wings. "We go through an average of 1500 pounds of buffalo wings a week. What does that tell you?"

For only $4.95, you get a large portion of 25 spicyl wings that can't be beat. If you're a wing fanatic, go to Buff's. But don't bother asking anyone for the wing sauce recipe. It's a secret but Connelly says that it's very easy to make.

Even easier to make are their beers. They serve up not only draught beers such as Budweiser, Bud Light and Bass, but a nice (though not unusual) selection of bottled beers.

The atmosphere is friendly. The crowd is fun and the waitstaff is small but they'll bring your order in due time. One gets the feeling that if you're in a rush for your food, then you're in the wrong place. The management here wants you to relax and enjoy yourself.

The one drawback is seating. There aren't a lot of places to sit down but considering overall size, Buff's has most likely done the best it can do. So walk over to Buff's Pub and feast on some of the best wing and beer combinations in town.

Buff's Pub is located at 317 Washington St. in Newton Corner.

•CLUB M-80 254-2054, 969 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A New York/Euro-style club, complete with selective doormen. It's just a small room (actually part of the Paradise), but it attracts a good-sized crowd, good-lookers too. Music is usually DJ dance music, but occasionally live acts perform. Cover varies but is generally steep. The crowd is trendy so dress up; it will improve your chances. .

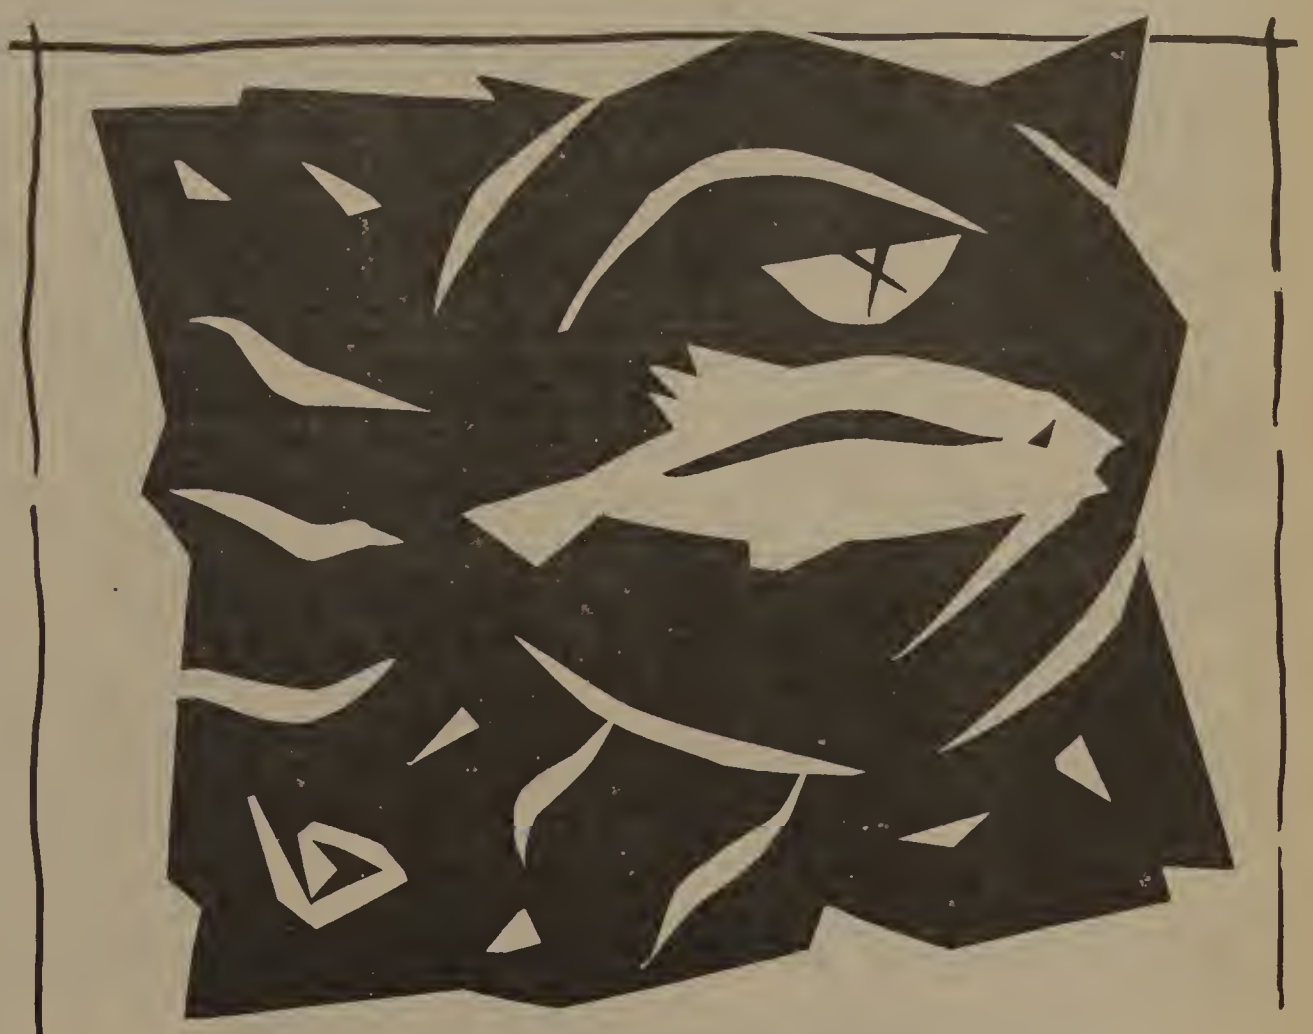
•THE COFFEE BAR 731-5070, 213 Washington St., Brookline. You won't find any booze here but you can catch a buzz. The kind that comes from the freshly ground, potent beans of quality java. Its clean, well-lit atmosphere works miracles upon any groggy soul. Coffee is served in imported Italian ceramic mugs, each hand-painted. They're open 7:30am-8pm Mon-Fri and 10am-6pm Weekends..

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos.. Let no man thirst for the lack of real ale is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant which features glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap including Burton's Bitter served at 52 degrees. Commonwealth Brewing Company's proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live bands play Sat. nights. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples..

•COPPERFIELD'S 247-8605, 98 Brookline Ave., Bos.. Traditionally a beer soaked college bar except after Sox's games when Copperfields attracts an avid sports crowd. Large crowds, Juke box, local live acts blaring Rock & Roll and a small dance floor liven the atmosphere. Basketball and video games too. Modest cover Thur.-Sat. Collared shirts are a must. .

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months..

•CRICKET'S 720-5570, 1015 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. Enjoy piano music and fresh air at one of Faneuil Hall's most visible bars. The atmosphere can provide a welcome respite from the bustle of people in the outside marketplace. The patio is covered by a greenhouse so there is no chance of being rained out. Or try the more traditional indoor section, decorated with wood and mirrors. No cover charge. Casual dress. A cappella singing Tue.-Thur. Live Jazz Sun.-Mon. .



Mon 10th.--Every Mon. and Tues. the Brian Walkley Band performs three shows •DAD'S DINER 296-DADS, 911 Boylston St., Bos.. A restaurant on weekdays. A hopping 50's bar at night and on weekends. Sunday nights ask Linda, the hottest bartender in Boston for her own special creation, a Purple Haze. The crowd varies from collegiate to professional. No cover. Dress is casual. You'll love the old-fashioned juke box!.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos.. This Newbury St. hot spot fills up consistently with singles and college students, not to mention sports fans. Dark and noisy. More action as the night subsides, this is the place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress..

•DESTINATIONS 742-1212, 1 Congress St., Boston. Where else can you have a drink, catch a game and learn the waterways of Sumatra all at the same time? This upscale bar has probably one of the easiest methods of learning geographic trivia without having to crack open a map or encyclopedia. The dress code is on the neater side, so no jeans please..

•DIAMOND JIM'S PIANO BAR Lenox Hotel 536-5300, 65 Exeter St., Bos.. A hotel piano bar with a relaxed atmosphere. Melt into an oversized lounge chair and absorb the music. The crowd runs the age gamut (from 21 to 60+). No cover. Dress

Taste the ~~Old~~ New Southwest!

It's more fresh and alive at the Cactus Club than ever! Featuring traditional and innovative foods at affordable prices. We got it all! Choose from our Daily Specials, Fresh Fish selection, or our "Heart Smart" and Vegetarian dishes. Our Hearty Brunch is sure to please any hungry crowd. It's Southwestern cuisine in the heart of Boston, just acoss from the Hynes Convention Center.

So whether you have a taste for nachos with all the fixings, a sizzling fajita and a cold margarita, or something just a little out of the ordinary come on down and relax with a taste of the "New Southwest".

TO JOE,
I WILL ALWAYS LOVE YOU !!!

LA TUA BOCCHINARA

To Sabrina,
SEI SVENUTA?!!i?? (private joke) We all miss you. "Four and Four Eight", take the next planeli!

Streghissimamente Mago'

My big sister, the president, congrats on all accomplishments and good luck with your office. Please just do me a favor and don't let the pressure get the best of you, we all know that you will do a great job, but one question, what do you call that thing you were wearing the other night?

God is to dog as Dot is to Tod. There's a lot of truth in that. i gave you everything, made you everything that you are and you should worship me. Instead you just slobber a lot and make messes on the living room carpet.

Have we been going to lunch without me Gigi? i hope that you haven't been union bashing when I am not there to hack away , oh I mean praise our wonderful student body. .How 'bout those Neanderthal men, oh one more question,does he still wear the green fish?

Who is going to be the next president? is anyone else concerned about the gradual demise of out future existence? Could you yourself save the world? Who's kidding who here, remember those fish that lasted a week, and the funeral for those' never die' house plants. Need i say more? paid for by the Michael Stipe for Grand Puba coalition.

The Smut Table: I'll miss you guys a lot. Hope you all get laid at least once from now till September . So we'll have something new to talk about. Love Bubbles.
P.S. Father Sean can i bum a cigarette? I need on really bad!!!

Bob R. of ipswich: if you ever touch an unwilling girl again, may a genital eating werewolf come out of nowhere and rip you apart. Suffer and live a eunuch's life you scum sucking tick on a rat's ass.

W.G. Shea: as much as we hate to admit , America does in fact have a class system. Rest assured that you are at the lower end of that class system!i Where my sister has dumped you, I'll miss your lovely wardrobe and hair style!

Lisa- i gave it to you in writing, i announced it publicly, now it's in the paper. i was wrong, you were right. Okay? Richard.

Darkman, your liquid brown eyes drive me wild. My heart pounds, my cheeks burn, and my dreams are laced with fantasies of the things I'd do to you if i wasn't married. Then again...Who knows!

To the gyrating keyboard player of Urban Oasis , the best band I've ever seen in Boston, i will put those hips to the test they deserve! P.S. I'll bring the tambourine.

Jane, it's time you realized that you are nothing but a grovelling toady. You might think the sun shines out of your previously fat behind but in reality your high opinion of yourself is shared by nobody. In a hurry.

To Kevin and friends. It must make you really excited to be so hated or why would you be such an asshole all the time. It must be nice to be deluded into thinking that your opinion actually matters. I hear the gerbil wants a divorce.

Billy, I love you more than marinated pig's feet. Hogs and kisses, Leigh.

Tali, handsome Young Republican looking for wealthy, politically similar WASP female to complain, shop and share my "America #1" philosophy with.

Y., Your extra blubber keeps me warm on cold winter nights, especially when the fire starts to die out. Thanks for stuffing your face on my account. H.

Dawn, Look at this, freedom of speech. What a concept,huh? Even you have the right to share your ardently Fascist and nationalistic beliefs with all these readers. Ed
Nancy, Congratulations on getting a job! When is the party you promised? Love all the relatives.

Happy Valentine's Day LDG (a.k.a. Grannie)i I'm sorry for all the hell i have ever put you through. "I should have appreciated you more when i wasn't such a loser. Love and possible forgiveness, E.#1, E.#2, Blob, R., J., etc...

Renee, What do the numbers 0988 and 021492 mean to you? Well if you haven't guessed, you will soon find out. Love, Iam Gay.

To Boston University hockey squad. Good luck in the Bean Pot and even better luck in the NCAA championships. This could be the year to erase those fresh "double-post" memories.

Jane,
Your hips aren't the only thing that wiggle when you walk. The rumor around town is that you're going in for your fifth facelift. Such is life in the entertainment Bizi Smell ya later.
Harold

Terri, hope the swelling has gone down. it's not often three total strangers will brutalize, fondle and tease one another in the course of two hours. I know I loved every minute of it!

Anita, You fool. What are trying to prove. You never told me my sexy nature and my bold attributes intimidated you. Next time, Long-Dong Silver 'aint staying put. You will learn the meaning of respect. You're mine! Clarence

To the toll booth operator on the Mass. Pike. What morbid poetry you hand to me every time I pay your toll. Please, I understand your job sucks, transportation is an impersonal thing but it says only a little about human nature. If you really want to see vital signs out of these people, try greasing your hands with Vaseline. That ought to rouse some emotion.

BARS & CLUBS

varies from casual to business wear. Tue. night is Jazz night. .

•DIVISION 16 353-0870, 955 Boylston St., Bos.. This art deco police station is now a bar and restaurant. They serve monster portions of food. The crowd consists of students and young singles. It's a great place for a fun dinner, but save the romantic meals for a quieter place. No cover. Casual dress. .

•DOCKSIDE 723-7050, 183 State St., Bos.. A cozy sports bar not far from Faneuil Hall. The crowd is varied - from jocks and business people to singles. Large-screen TV for game viewing. Jukebox music. No cover. Casual dress. More than one Celtic has been spotted downstairs..

Thur 6th.–The Sense Fri 7th.–Fat City Sat 8th.--The Radio Kings with Johnny Groove Mon 10th.–

•EDIBLE REX 508-667-6393, 251 Old Concord Rd., Billerica. This club, whose logo is king of the dinosaurs, offers a variety of live music with 3 bands playing nightly Wed.-Sun. Rock & Roll is the standard, but Heavy Metal, Acoustic or Thrash can also be heard. Edibles offered. Modest cover varies. Air-conditioned clothing is required. .

•ELIOT LOUNGE 262-1078, 370 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A sometimes rowdy and extremely preppy sports bar is known as the unofficial headquarters for the Boston Marathon. Dancing to DJ music on Sat. nights. Casual atmosphere that attracts all types. Modest cover on Sat. nights. No dress code. Their cafe serves American food, including pizza, burgers and sandwiches. Don't forget your alligator pants..

•FRED P. OTT'S 227-9373, 29 North Market St., Bos.. This definitive Faneuil Hall bar draws predominantly students and tourists. Dance to DJ music on weekends. Moderate cover Fri. and Sat. Casual dress. Arrive early to beat the line..

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare that, when mixed with some beer, can be a dangerous combo if anyone is walking behind you. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment..

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends. Casual dress. .

Wed 5th.–Karaoke every Wed. Sun 9th.–Every Sun. is DJ Chris Mon 10th.--Irish Session happens every Mon.

•GRENDEL'S DEN 491-1050, 89 Winthrop St., Camb.. In this casual underground (literally) Harvard Sq. bar, you'll see a lot of maroon sweatshirts. Harvard students eat, drink and live here. Some have chosen to move here after graduation. But this establishment has a dark-paneled, German beer house feel and offers Cambridge Lager on tap. If you're not engaged in a philosophical debate, you can enjoy the free appetizers (weekdays 5-7pm). Upstairs offers a full Bavarian menu and has an ongoing fire in its oversized fireplace. No cover. No dress code..

•GROG 508-465-8008, 13 Middle St., Newburyport. Rock, R&B and dance music is the entertainment Thur.-Sun. nights. The crowd and the ambiance at Grog is diversified. One can choose from 3 bars and a formal dining room. (Mexican, steaks, seafood and chowder) Cover varies. No dress code. Gargle a grog (their version of a hot toddy) come winter..

Thur 6th.–the Boston Baked Blues Band Fri 7th.–Jump Street Sat 8th.–Shadow Sun 9th.--The Peter Giftos Parker Wheeler Blues Party happens every Sun. Thur 13th.–The Billy Lee Band Fri 14th.–Dick Kaplan's Surf Night with Bahama Bob Sat 15th.–The Landlords of Soul

Fri 7th.–The Fools

•HAMPSHIRE HOUSE 227-9600, 84 Beacon St., Bos.. An upscale piano bar with an active business clientele. The music runs the gamut from Jazz to Showtunes to Classical. No cover. The atmosphere is formal. A jacket and tie is requested of all male patrons..

•HARBOR CLUB 426-8600, 145 Northern Ave., Bos.. This 2 floor, 6 bar club offers a sweeping view of the harbor and of Boston's spectacular skyline. Contemporary music with live Jazz Thur. Free buffet every Wed.- Fri. Also available for private functions. Valet parking. Free cover before 9pm. Proper dress. Suit jacket and tie required for male patrons. .

•HARD ROCK CAFE 424-7625, 131 Clarendon St., Bos.. Sure it's trendy and sure it's a touristy, but where else can you watch people ooh-ing and aah-ing at a shrine devoted to Prince. Save any important and serious conversation for the ride home because, chances are, you won't be able to hear each other over the loud music anyway. .

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required. .

Wed 5th.–Open Mike Blues Jam hosted by the Rick Russell Band happens every Wed. Sun 9th.--Spend Sunday Evenings with Boston's Only Rhythm & Blues Jam with Stovall Brown Tue 11th.–Acoustic Roots Jam with Chance Gardner every Tues.

•HOULIHAN'S 367-6377, 60 State St., Bos.. A restaurant/bar at the edge of Faneuil Hall. Dancing to Top 40 DJ music every night. Typical downtown crowd - students, tourists, and young professionals. Frequently voted Best Singles bar by Best of Boston. Moderate cover Thur.-Sat. Dress is casual, but no jeans or sneakers after 7pm..

•HUB CLUB 338-6999, 533 Washington St. , Bos.. An eclectic 3-story dance club. Music ranges from Rap to Reggae but is mainly progressive. Cover varies from modest to heavy and increases after 11pm. Wed. nights 18+. Progressive dress Wed.-Fri. Proper dress Fri.-Sat. No sneakers. .

•HUNTER'S FOOD AND SPIRITS 262-5551, 885 Boylston St., Bos.. An American pub with a small outdoor restaurant. It's a good place to get a solid bite to eat and a few drinks. On the pub side, the crowd is composed of singles, college students and tourists. Expect a small line on weekends and standing room unless sitting in a puddle of stale beer is your idea of a good time. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu..

•INDIGO 497-7200, 823 Main St., Camb.. This womens' night club can become rowdy after hours as women party and polish the floor to DJ house and dance pop tunes. Cover after 10:30pm so arrive early. No dress code. .

•JACOB WIRTH'S 338-8586, 37 Stuart St., Bos.. Jacob Wirth has been serving hearty German fare since its doors opened in 1868 (superb sauerkraut). CHUGGING TO THE TOP

Get in your car, and stuff a Tony tape into your tapedeck. Following the forward motion of your car, the juicy, gung-ho, wildly energetic voice of motivation-maven Tony Robbins will help race your own get-ahead engine. This guy - who's been from rags to riches several times over, only to land on the shores at age 29 a multi-millionaire - makes success the "product" he has for sale. Robbins urges, coaches, cajoles and almost teases his listeners into identifying their own leverage point, that key tilting-place between pain (the pain of not "going for it") and pleasure (the pleasure of having "gone for and gotten it") and then puts a match to that firecracker string that will inspire them to take action. He advises the shedding of draggy "limiting beliefs" ("I'm too old, too young, too uneducated, etc.") and gets acolytes to forge connections through the very loose science of "Neuro-Association," that will link effort to pleasure. The success-seeker is urged to imitate Robbins' own meliorist self by abandoning the erroneous notion that the past equals the future. Instead, the idea is to helicoptor up to new and indeed, manic heights, reborn in optimistic zeal, drawn by a passion for results, money, and success while, as Robbins admonishes, at the end of each tape "Living With Passion." (Speaking of money, the price of these tapes helps to explain why Robbins is so rich; buy them with a friend.)

BEAUTY GROWS ON TREES

With as little packaging hype as if the jars grew on trees - in fact many of the ingredients do - Pepper's hair, skin, and body lotions are arrayed guilelessly in their pastel-checkerboard jars. These natural products are the goops and unguents which a former pharmacist has concocted out of banana, grapefruit, orange, cucumber, avocado and even tomato. This unisex line includes facial products - moisturizers, spritzy clarifiers, cleansers - hair products and body oils. As soft to the touch as custard, Pepper's big sellers include peppermint foot-massage creme, orchid-oil cleanser, and the outsize jar of spinachy-green, "means-business" stuff called Vegetable Mud which includes, indeed, such earthy ingredients as tomatoes and mushrooms. The Honey-almond scrub has crunchy particles, and other bottles flaunt their raw herbal, or oceanic ingredients like kelp and seaweed. Aromatherapy oils (a new departure at Pepper's), with each exuding its own bright, sharp scent, can be put in a humidifier or rubbed on the skin. Each one has its own defined target; oil of clove relieves sore muscles, oil of thyme allegedly stimulates thought while others have a relaxing effect. Shopping at Pepper's entails carefully scrutinizing the spectrum of options, and then identifying your particular needs as to normal, dry, oily etc. It also happens to be a delicious cruise through a "flower-and-fruit world captured in a jar."

Pepper's. 745 Boylston Street, Boston, 236-4117, and at Corner Mall, Boston.

WOMAN ON THE EDGE OF NOW

Daena Giardella begins her one-woman show by moving her hands in wiggly rivers through the air to suggest the lightness, the excitement, the ever-mutable, nature-of reality. What comes out of this dissolving of certitude is a satirical, one-woman show in which this actress moves in a trice from character to character, and so liquidly you hardly notice she's changing age, nationality, and sex, going from Italian grandmother, to gas station guy, to attitudey tough girl. And once inside a character, she descends seamlessly through layers of that person's being such that Clarence Thomas, during his Inquisition, suddenly becomes little-boy Clarence innocently learning dirty words in the playground. And in her rendition of Noriega (reportedly a cross-dresser) she has him start by talking tough as a general in his uniform, and then continues his spiel, with a nightgown over his camouflage. Giardella constantly layers a psychological lasagne by combining tough/vulnerable/comic in rapid succession. Having found an unexpected home in Israel over a year ago, Giardella stayed on during the Gulf War. She plays with the themes of danger and survival complete with the grotesquerie of gas masks, amid dark, yet surprisingly enlivening, humor.

Daena Giardella, A Provocative Social Satire About Surviving In the 90's, at Beacon Hill Playhouse, Feb 13-March 29. Beacon Hill Playhouse (Formerly Lyric Stage,) 54 Charles Street, Boston 720-0082

AROUND TOWN

Favorite TV dad and funny man Bill Cosby will tickle your funnybone when he appears In The Round at Brandeis University's Red Auerbach Arena on Mar. 14. Cosby, author of "Love and Marriage," "Fatherhood" and "Time Flies," will perform at 7 and 10pm. Tickets are $22.50 and $19.50 and are available at the Orpheum Theatre Box Office, all Ticketmaster locations or charged by calling 617-931-2000. The Jello Pudding tempter and man behind TV's Cliff Huxtable should be in prime form. Tickets go on sale Mar. 3 at 10am. Tickets are available at the Gosman Center only on the night of the show.

Sheena Easton and Raul Julia star in the upcoming production of Man of La Mancha, coming to the Colonial Theater from March 10 to the 29. Tickets are now on sale at the Colonial Theatre Box Office and all TicketMaster outlets. This limited three week engagement is currently celebrating its 25th anniversary production, prior to Broadway. Performances run Tuesday through Saturday at 8pm with matinees Thursdays and Saturdays at 2pm and Sundays at 3pm. Prices range from $22.00 to $55.00. For further information, call the Colonial Theatre at 426-9366.

The Looney Tunes Hall of Fame Film Festival from Feb. 19 to March 5, offers animation buffs the chance to see the most acclaimed Warner Brothers cartoons of all time. Watch Daffy Duck try to convince Elmer Fudd that it's rabbit season, not duck season. Hall of Famers Porky Pig, Daffy Duck, Elmer Fudd and of course Bugs Bunny strut their stuff in 1940s and 50s classics. Two Porky Pig cartoons at the festival haven't been seen in a theater since their original release. Don't miss this incredible collection of funnies. Tickets ($6.50 adult, $4.50 children and matinee) are available at all Bass/Ticketmaster locations and by phone at 931-2000. Show times at the Somerville Theatre, 55 Davis Square, are 2, 4:15, 7:30 and 9:45pm. Call 625-5700 for more information.

The Improper Bostonian's Eye on the Town recently caught up with Hasty Pudding's 1992 Woman of the Year Jodie Foster, in town Feb. 11 to pick up her "Pudding Pot." And what a reception! During the parade, cheers of "We Love You, Jodie!" came flooding down from Harvard University rooftops. Foster entered the public eye as the "Coppertone Girl" at the tender age of three. Her recent ventures were the determined FBI agent in The Silence of the Lambs and Little Man Tate, her first directorial feature. She has acted in nearly 30 feature films, including the Academy Award-winning, The Accused.

After the cancellation of their New Year's Eve show at the Channel, the Cramps have returned to Boston with their new album Look Mom, No Head (Restless Records) and a 21+ show at Avalon on Feb. 25. Escalating rockabilly and blues to a horrifying status, the Cramps are sure to exhume such hits as "Goo Goo Muck" as well as the more recent "Bikini Girls with Machine Guns" and "I Want to Get in Your Pants." The Reverend Horton Heat opens for the band. Tickets on sale at the Orpheum Theatre Box Office or call Ticketmaster at (617) 931-2000.

Three casts perform in A.R. Gurney's enormously successful international hit, Love Letters, playing now through March 1 at the Wilbur Theatre at 246 Tremont Street. After kicking off this return engagement on February 11 with Lauren Bacall and Richard Kiley, the current cast stars Jane Curtin and Edward Herrmann (Pictured at a Feb. 19 press conference at The Improv). The play focuses on a couple's relationship as seen through the humorous and romantic letters they've exchanged since childhood. Curtin and Herrmann will hold court until February 23. Charlton Heston and Alexis Smith will assume the roles from the 25 to March 1. Performances are Tuesdays through Sundays with matinee and evening performances. Call 1-800-382-8080 for information.

Have Fun Melting Away The Winter Blues

by Ray Krise

Sandra Kimball

I don't think anyone cares what the Boston Festival people would have us believe: Winter in Boston (a) sucks eggs (b) pounds sand (c) can do it in its hat and call it curls (d) eats the big one (e) is about as much fun as a nitroglycerine enema following a root canal. Why we live in Boston is one of life's major mysteries, right up there with why do they keep "Knots Landing" on the air. The fact, however, is that we currently are bored, cold and stuck with the Midwinter Boston Blues. How do we make it through to springtime?

As my Zen martial arts master says: "Keep your direction while dealing with your situation." This is a polite Zen way of saying "Keep moving toward good stuff while dealing with your dog throwing up all over your bed." The trick of getting through February (that slum among months) is to think up fun stuff to do until Spring has crept up on you. Toward that end, here are some priceless tips:

(1) Don't watch the Winter Olympics. Boredom, thy name is the Winter Olympics. (Which do not, in fact exist. The only real olympics consist of track and field, swimming, gymnastics, boxing, wrestling, karate and nothing else. There are no other sports in the real Olympics. Certainly there are no wimp sports.) Adding to the boredom is the fact that you're watching all this damn snow. You're left cold and bored - exactly the same as going to First Night - and floundering in a sea of commercials. Except for when the Swedish Bikini Team ad comes on, this is a complete downer. You're better off watching a Sally Struthers commercial.

(2) Start an exercise program. This is a whole lot better than sitting on your duff, being bored by the pretend olympics. Tan-line weather is much closer than you think. Regardless of what those local health flyers claim, you need at least three months of an intelligent exercise program to make a significant change in the way you look(if you are into the "Seriously Embarrassing" range on the Bodymeter).

Instead of feeling bad, now you can get ready to embarrass others when you seriously bare your ass this summer. The best way to get in shape is by combining aerobic and anaerobic exercise. The best place to find that combination is in a gym. Aerobics, stair machines, stationary bicycles and so on, will give you the aerobic workout you need to burn away fat and reset your metabolism so it will keep fat off. Lifting weights (free weights or weight machines) will tone and shape you. This is by far the fastest and best way to get a soap-opera body.

The most important thing to look for in a gym is its proximity to where you live or work. If you're always near the gym you can't wimp out.

National chains like Bally's or Women's World usually are exceptionally good values. You probably always have thought of them as the McGyms of the fitness world, steeped in mediocrity and cost-cutting. Actually, the reverse is true. These gyms usually have very extensive facilities, although you won't find chichi accouterments like beauty salons and masseurs named Raul attached to them. These gyms sell enormous numbers of memberships and also have the buying power of national chains, both of which factors allow them to offer great values. They also have a huge dropout rate, which leaves them relatively uncrowded.

Talk with the staff and ask them any questions you want. Make sure you feel comfortable with their expertise. They should be able to answer any of your questions without hesitation, and in language you can understand. Good instructors are mandatory for a good gym.

Make sure there are plenty of cute and available members. Joining a gym does more for the winter blahs than get you in shape for the summer. It also gives you fun things to do while wading through February.

(3) Give tourists wrong directions. Take out your winter hostilities on tourists. Send people looking for the Freedom Trail through the Callahan Tunnel, where they can savor historic Jevelli's Restaurant in East Boston. When Rubes asks you, "Where can I find Cheers," tell them, "Thursday night on NBC, 9 o'clock." Send people looking for anything else to either the Combat Zone or the Southeast Expressway during rush hour. Anyone stupid enough to visit Boston in the winter is someone who deserves your contempt.

(4) Pig out at Le Meridien's Chocolate Bar. Every Saturday afternoon, Le Meridien Hotel offers a now legendary all-you-can-gorge buffet consisting of nothing but chocolate. Originally (and possibly still) intended as a family event to lure people into the Great American Nowhere where the Meridien is situated, the Chocolate Bar has instead become a notorious bloatfest for adults addicted to chocolate. Now that your working out at the gym everyday, you can indulge yourself for the entire three hours (2:30 to 5:30 pm) the buffet is open; and, at $9.50 for adults and $6.50 for people under 12, it works out to only three bucks and change per hour for continuous foraging on (as the Meridien's propaganda puts it) "cakes, cookies, pies, tortes, chocolate pecan pie, white chocolate and a chocolate fondue." Medical science tells us that eating chocolate produces the same physiological response as being in love. In addition to being much more predictable and controllable than being in love, the Chocolate Bar costs a lot less.

(5) Start a good old-fashioned bar brawl. Sexism is back in style. Men are men and women are girls. Guys get to start showing off for dames again. Chief among guy showing-off stuff is beating the crap out of some other guy while women are watching. This is the adult equivalent of doing a handstand on your bicycle handlebars - dumb as hell but it gets the girls' attention. The rising popularity of sports bars and Al Bundy have created a resurgence in bar brawls. Get a few of your buddies together and head for the financial district, or - if you really have cajones - any bar in South Boston, and walk up to some guy and tell him you don't like his face and his mother has unusual knowledge of all the major farm animals. That ought to do it. You'll find yourself in the middle of an old-fashioned all-American bar brawl in no time. By the time you get out of the hospital, winter will be over.

(6) Learn to beg for spare change in Japanese. This winter cure-all is pretty much self-explanatory, not to mention eminently practical.

(7) Shop for your spring wardrobe. Consider this one seriously. Now is the time when truly stylish Bostonians - all four of us - start buying our springtime duds. Only people who shop at Jos. A. Banks, Clothier wait for spring to start buying spring clothes. All the good stuff is picked over after March.

This tip is particularly important for the smaller-sized man. Local fashion retailers tell me that, for whatever reason, the most fashionable men's clothing sells out in the smaller sizes first.

(8) Make Wednesday night Home Video Night. Looking for cheap entertainment to see you through till Robin Redbreast returns? You should know that Wednesday night is traditionally the least-busy rental night of a video store's week. Like with smaller men being more fashion conscious, this is a phenomenon as yet unblessed with an explanation. It does, however, make it more likely that you'll be able to rent the tape you want if you shuffle in on a Wednesday. As a bonus, many stores offer discounts for midweek tape rentals.

(9) Go skiing at Mt. Wachusett wearing a Mickey Mouse shirt, and tell all the locals you're an advance person for the Winter Wonderland theme park.

A virulent rumor has pervaded the middle part of the state for the past two years or so. It goes more or less like this: The Walt Disney Company is buying Mt. Wachusett and plans to turn it into a theme park named Winter Wonderland. This is the kind of rumor that "everybody knows," but no one knows how it got started, because the people at Disney don't have a clue about Mt. Wachusett or Winter Wonderland. One version of the rumor claims it all started when three long limousines bearing Walt Disney plates pulled up at Mt. Wachusett, filled with Disney executives. There are a few problems with this foundation. First, it would have been a hell of a long drive from either Florida or California. Another is that The Disney Company has no limousines. Nor do they go around flouting Walt Disney license plates. Neither does any company with a reputation for hard-nosed bargaining, such as Disney, let the mouse out of the bag with such a high profile appearance. This story makes about as much sense a Michael Eisner trying to sneak into the Universal Studios Theme Park wearing a pair of Mickey Mouse ears.

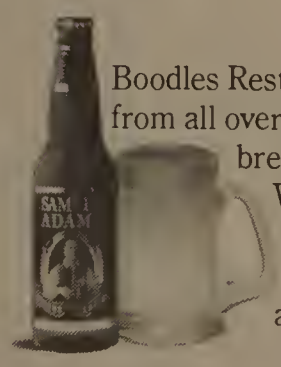
Also, Mt. Wachusett isn't owned by the ski lodge that operates on the mountain. Mt. Wachusett is owned by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, so the guys in the alleged limos were talking to the wrong people, another mistake Disney isn't likely to make.

Nevertheless, a Disney resort would drive up land values around there in a big way, so the locals cling to the rumor. Which is why claiming you're shopping around for Winter Wonderland real estate will snare you the royal treatment.

(10) Take a trip to Walt Disney World. Speaking of Mickey and the gang, if you're going to head for warm weather, you could do a whole lot worse than Disney World, which is in the throes of celebrating its Twentieth Anniversary Surprise Party. Disney and the travel industry have thrown together a raft of package deals, many of then eminently affordable. Most of the hotels and lodges on Disney World property let several people crowd into one room, another money-saving option. Personally, Disney World is my favorite spot on earth, a place no sensible person wants to leave and have to go back to the reality of gum on the sidewalks and people with ten items in the "eight items or less [sic; it should be 'fewer']" line.

Disney World has added several new attractions this year to celebrate the anniversary and lure people hard-hit by the recession. There is a truly awesome parade at night through the Magic Kingdom called the SpectroMagic Light Parade, where the floats are decorated with fiber optics, lasers and holograms. Disney had guys from the pentagon come over to inspect the technology when it was under development. People wearing Dinosaur and Ninja Turtle costumes are now wandering around the MGM Studios park. Taking the demographics of The Improper Bostonian's readers into account, let me recommend Pleasure Island, Disney World's nightclub district, where one club has a revolving dance floor, and where they celebrate New Year's Eve every night, complete with fireworks and confetti.

The best way to go to Disney World is to become an accredited journalist, get on their press list, and have Disney bring you down at their expense. I assure you it would not in any way bias your journalistic objectivity.



(11) Impersonate a hooker. Want the thrills of living dangerously, but afraid of heights (no bungee jumping), fond of good health (no smoking or sex), and become attached to your teeth (eliminates suggestion #5 above)? Winter is the perfect time to find out what it feels like to be a hooker, streetwalker, slattern, roundheels - and you don't have to take anybody who propositions you up on his or her offer. Everybody is wearing lots of clothes, so you can pack an Uzi under your overcoat and be perfectly safe. Think what it will do for your ego just to stand there and have people drive by, wanting you, offering money, making wet kissing noises and generally demonstrating their intelligence. Who knows? It might even lead to a new career path. For a lawyer, for example, this would be a step up the moral ladder.

If you're a woman, the best place to strut your stuff is not the Combat Zone, but the Theater District. If you're a guy, the male hookers hang out late at night near the corner of Boylston and Clarendon streets, along the side of Shreve, Crump & Low.

(12) Buy everything advertised in The Improper Bostonian. This is the best possible way for you to have fun.

Well, it would be for us.

NOT JUST A FITNESS CLUB - IT'S A LIFESTYLE

Nancy Knose

by Nancy Birnbaum

When "Entertainment Tonight" was recently wooing WBZ's longtime arts and entertainment reporter Joyce Kulhawik, it seemed like what would follow would be a game of musical AIRS! Debbie Enblom, formally of Channel 7, expressed interest in going over to Channel 4. And why not - Sara Edwards, formally of Channel 4 has replaced Debbie at 7. Other names tossed around included Channel 5's Eileen Prose and KISS RADIO's Bill Costa, but when the music finally stopped, it was Joyce who still had her seat. Apparently at the eleventh hour, WBZ said "whoa" to the West Coast woo and signed her to a new contract. When asked how long and how much, Joyce played the artful dodger, but then again who wouldn't! Apparently WBZ's parent company, Westinghouse Electric is experiencing major financial woes (and who isn't!). Sources told me that the Pittsburgh-based powerhouse had to write off a billion dollars of bad real estate deals! And even though more layoffs are rumored, the honchos still decided you've gotta have arts! That's good news for Boston and especially good news for Joyce since it means she can now continue living in the dream house recently designed by her architect husband Andrew Cohen.

Moving from the arts to the sciences, have you heard of a Cuomo sapien? It's a term I just coined and loosely translated it means that species of man dedicated to the election of Mario Cuomo for President! And I understand that the genius of the species could be none other than deposed Dukakis campaign manager John Sasso. Whether he'll become the Cuomo majordomo is still uncertain. One thing, however, is certain. This time around Mr. Sasso will be wary of any species resembling the Joseph Biden variety!

On the subject of kissing, did you know that Dr. Ruth had 3 husbands? She told me so in a recent interview and I couldn't help wondering if this pint-sized sexpert just wears them out!! I also wonder who wears the pants in her house.

Moving along to other trials and tribulations, could Neil Chayet's "Looking at the Law" become "Looking at the Door"? It seems the recently named Massachusetts Lawyer of the year who also just started at WBZ radio, almost forgot to thank his bosses at Mintz-Levin at a bash they threw to honor him at the Park Plaza. Fortunately, at the end of his speech, he managed to say thanks. Good thing, because Mr. Chayet, at least on this night, was one lawyer who was definitely "courting" disaster!!

WHDH-TV, the station that always seems to be on the brink of the "d" word, is there once again. My sources tell me that the station is on the block...again, only this time around, the offers are Mickey Mouse. Specifically, Disney-owned Buena Vista Television, has made an offer that is far less than what WHDH owes the bank. That's a far cry from the three hundred million dollars they offered the station several years ago. Seven has definitely not been a lucky number for WHDH, but then, it's a very goofy business! And speaking of goofy, here's another thought from the rumor mill: Could WHDH really be considering bringing over a blond anchorette from another Boston station to be a reporter and fill-in anchor? That's just what they need - another bombshell! Stay tuned.

Finally, Chestnut Hill hairdresser David Gambale is seeing stars. Having coiffed the Boston Music Awards for the past 4 years, and being the personal stylist to Sara Edwards, Janet Langhard, and Til Tuesday's Aimee Mann, he's getting some interest from the Terminator himself, Arnold and that's worth getting pumped up about!

Grand Canyon
"Flawed but relevant"

Grand Canyon uses six interwoven lives to display the pessimism sweeping over our country. Kevin Kline and Danny Glover are Mack and Simon, an affluent suburbanite and a tow truck driver whose lives are intertwined on a night of danger. All the characters talk with extreme, almost unreal, perception about the problems in the world around them. Also starring Steve Martin, Mary Louise Parker, Alfre Woodard and Mary McDonnell the acting is very good. The problem is that there are simply too many characters for them all to remain immediate. Grand Canyon shows a society that has lost direction and confidence. No answers are suggested but this film does hint at some hope. That alone makes Grand Canyon worth seeing. J.A.

Hand That Rocks the Cradle
"Mediocre and predictable"

The Hand that Rocks the Cradle is full of gratuitous violence and though it is worth a scream or two it won't rock your socks off. Clare Bartel (Annabella Sciorra) is a supremely happy modern day woman. When she decides to build a greenhouse she hires a nanny to help out with her other responsibilities. The nanny is Peyton Flanders (Rebecca De Mornay) who seeks revenge for her own tragedies by assuming control over Clare's children and even her husband. De Mornay is realistically psychotic and Sciorra is very convincing as she becomes more and more unsure of herself. Though The Hand that Rocks the Cradle is scary at times, the plot is mediocre and predictable. Save your money.

Final Analysis
"Generic and Befuddled"

The problem with Final Analysis is that it sacrifices substance for style and fails at both. Richard Gere is a psychiatrist manipulated by two beautiful, blond sisters (Kim Bassinger and Uma Thurman). Set in San Francisco and awash in cheap Freudian imagery (a lighthouse plays a key role) this psychological/murder mystery falls way short of its Hitchcock aspirations. Final Analysis is long on exposition and generic dialogue. Bassinger shows a nice evil streak and Eric Roberts provides chiseled menace but in the end, Final Analysis is too long and as befuddled as Gere's expressions. Skip it. J.A.

JFK
"Intellectually Stoned"

Surprise, Surprise! Oliver Stone has made a controversial film. With JFK, Stone has woven elements of the 1967 case presented against Clay Shaw by New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison with his own interpretations. The result is a film that, though extremely powerful and thought provoking, leaves the viewer with a dangerous visual of the events surrounding the assassination of president John F. Kennedy. Stone has created a masterpiece which should encourage further investigation into a case which until today has been closed to the blind eye of America. Kevin Costner is Garrison and is surrounded by a star-studded cast that includes Jack Lemmon, Joe Pesci, Sissy Spacek, Donald Sutherland and Gary Oldman. T.A.S.

NOTHING'S SACRED IN WAYNE'S WORLD

by Tobin Streett

One-liners abound in what is sure to be one of the years funniest and stupidest movies. But Wayne's World is so stupid that it'll make your stomach ache for hours. The film stars Mike Myers and Dana Carvey in an elongated version of the Saturday Night Live skit begun by these two funny guys. And with it, they've brought their own unique vocabulary, with words like "robo babe" and "hose beast" working their way into the American consciousness. Be prepared for movie line overkill, as rest assured, Wayne's World will be the movie with this year's most repeated lines.

On the surface, it lacks the characteristics of what most producers would say are required for a successful movie. Like a legitimate plot. But Director Lorne Michaels compensates for this gap with a barrage of puns and a realistic take on the stereotypical metalhead. "We packed it full of jokes. The people who made this movie didn't know what couldn't be done."

Myers and Carvey have obviously followed suit with simulated cable access-like movements (talking to the camera) and school boy references to states of masculine excitement. This one revolves around sleazy television executive Benjamin Oliver (played quite naturally by Rob Lowe), whose attempts to exploit Wayne's and Garth's cable access show lead to some exciting adventures with our two heroes and their metalhead pals. We follow these well-intentioned party lovers around Chicago, in and out of nightclubs and tv studios and to a backstage party of an Alice Cooper concert. It never gets boring. Wayne, Garth and their friends are just a bunch of dudes who like to hang out with each other.

Wayne's World
Paramount Pictures
Directed by:
Penelope Spheeris
Starring
Michael Myers Dana Carvey

But this time around, Wayne's in love with Cassandra (Tia Carrere), a heavy metal babe singer who's got Wayne doing some crazy things. But in spite of their natural attraction to each other, Wayne is far from getting hitched. His belief: "Marriage is punishment for shoplifting in some countries."

As we spend time with Wayne and Garth, our defenses fall to their irresistible charm as these two lovable characters sway us over to their side. You'll cheer internally as Wayne, the brains behind the duo, shrewdly calculates his moves against slimeball producer, Benjamin Oliver. Myers, who also co-wrote Wayne's World, manages to convince us that Wayne and Garth are indeed the opposite of what at times they appear to be: in fact, they're exceptionally brilliant.

In some subtle way, this film makes the right connections. Wayne's World has style. You may not want to live in Wayne's World, but it's sure a fun place to visit. Wayne and Garth are happy guys. But Wayne's World is something more than just another slapstick show of puns, jibes and stupid props. You know what you're going to get ahead of time, so it's hard to leave this film disappointed. This is producer Lorne Michaels' first full length motion picture production and he gets nothing but high grades. Artistic liberties are obviously a must when it comes to this Not For Prime Time icon and his two stars. It's obvious that Michaels knew that the natural camaraderie between Carvey, Myers and himself would lead to this laugh-a-minute extravaganza.

So buy your tickets today and travel to Wayne's World. It's one trip you're sure to enjoy.

Mississippi Masala - A Spicy Story of Love

by Jason Alexander

Mississippi Masala is a new film from Mira Nair, director of the highly successful Salaam Bombay. There is a great deal to like in this interracial story of passion and pride, but a lack of subtlety prevents the film from reaching an even higher plateau.

An Indian family is expelled from Uganda in 1972, victims of Idi Amin's xenophobia. They end up in the unlikely location of Greenwood, Mississippi. There, some 18 years later, this family exists as part of an Indian community trying to maintain their religion and culture amid unlikely surroundings.

Disruption comes in the form of love between the daughter Mina, played by newcomer Sarita Choudhury, and Demetrius (Denzel Washington) the owner and operator of a small carpet-cleaning company. Their romance disrupts the delicate balance of the communities, exposing their isolationism. Amid heightened emotions, Mina and Demetrius are driven apart and ostracized for having "broken the rules."

This whole theme of the irony of racism among victims of such hatred is repeatedly depicted. Both communities were taken from their homelands as slaves and despite a lack of actual contact, those homelands still shape their identities. The problem is that we are shown these similarities and they are reinforced frequently by the dialogue until the effect is diluted. The lowest point is reached when Washington and Choudhury talk on the phone in the same position, wearing similar clothes - both with their stomachs exposed. We get the point.

Dexter (Tico Wells), Mina (Sarita Choudhury), Tyrone (Charles S. Dutton) and Demetrius (Denzel Washington) enjoy a family barbecue.

Washington's acting projects simplicity, a difficult task for one accustomed to complex characters. In her screen debut, Choudhury exhibits alluring beauty which she combines with a certain feistiness. She falls just short, however, in moments of emotion and misery.

Mississippi Masala
MGM Pictures

Starring
Denzel Washington
Sarita Choundhury
Roshan Seth

Many of the Indian actors are stars of that country's extensive theatrical heritage. Noteworthy is Roshan Seth as Mina's father Jay. His eyes effectively carry the memory of Uganda, the only home he ever knew, even when those eyes are looking out over the parking lot of a Mississippi motel.

Director Mira Nair successfully tells the story of a community and its personalities using subtle body language and touches of humor instead of lengthy speeches. Mississippi Masala peters out without a satisfactory conclusion. The characters and the story just drift away.

The music is outstanding and should not be overlooked as an excellent companion to the story and the cinematography. With a mixture of the blues as well as African and Indian musical styles, it serves as an excellent backdrop for this tale of different traditions and cultures.

A "masala" is a blend of hot, colorful and potent spices. Mississippi Masala is also colorful and potent and, though not subtle at times, it is interesting. Mississippi Masala above all offers insight into a situation outside mainstream experience. That certainly makes it worth seeing.

FLICKS IN A FLASH

Fried Green Tomatoes
"Wonderful and balanced"

Fried Green Tomatoes has been billed as a vehicle for Jessica Tandy and Kathy Bates. These two oscar winners give excellent performances, but their relationship serves as a frame for the heart of the film. Tandy tells the story of Idgey Threadgoode (Mary Stuart Masterson) and Ruth Jamison (Mary Louise Parker) in flashback style. United by tragedy, they form a lasting friendship, one of absolute love with an understood, but not exploited or explored homosexuality. Masterson and Parker are excellent, perfectly balanced in a rich, though slightly idealized recreation of 1920's Alabama. The beauty of the film is the way their story unites Tandy and Bates, providing both with purpose and hope in increasingly empty lives. A wonderful film. J.A.

Hear My Song
"Delightfully Fresh"

Hear my Song is a wonderfully fresh film. Set in England and Ireland it draws upon the legend of famed Irish tenor, Josef Locke. A young nimble-minded concert promoter played by Adrian Dunbar books a fake Locke and disappoints his girlfriend, her mother, his creditors and his whole community. This first part of the movie is a little confused but the film improves greatly as Dunbar returns to his native Ireland in a quixotic hunt for the reclusive Locke (Ned Beatty). The performances are strong. And with innocence and siy humor Hear My Song is a low-key celebration of love and friendship. A delightful change of pace. J.A.

The Great Mouse Detective
"Cute but no magic"

After the phenomenal success of The Little Mermaid and Beauty and the Beast this re-release of The Great Mouse Detective is an attempt to take advantage of the craze. Without a doubt, this cartoon version of Sherlock Holmes is certainly cute, as Basil of Baker Street tries to foil the fiendish plot of Professor Ratigan. But there isn't the magic that one has come to expect from Disney. Basil (voice of Barrie Ingham) is wonderfully agile, both in movement and vocabulary but Ratigan (voice of Vincent Price) doesn't quite reach that special Disney level of villainy. There is sure to be a flood of animated film releases in the near future, Beauty and the Beast is a much better investment. J.A.

Shining Through
"Stands Out with Suspense"

Shining Through has its faults. It's a little too long and stretches its credibility at times. But, the shortcomings of this war-time drama are adequately covered by tension and suspense. Melanie Griffith is a confident and cocky American secretary who volunteers for a dangerous mission and becomes stranded in Germany. By filming on location, director David Seltzer creates an atmosphere of omnipresent threat, recapturing the confidence of the third reich at its zenith. Michael Douglas is a fairly one-dimentional hero, but with a nice self-depreciating air. There is nothing overwhelming about it, but Shining Through stands out in a crowded movie field. J.A.

Medicine Man
"Worthwhile but not Great"

The Amazonian rain forest is an ecological miracle and its destruction is a tragedy which is often overlooked. Medicine Man attempts to highlight the problem with Sean Connery as a bio-chemist who has discovered a cure for cancer hidden somewhere in "mother nature's kitchen." Much of Medicine man is predictable, in particular, the adaptation of Connery's new research assistant (Lorraine Bracco) to both the forest and Connery. The dialogue in Medicine Man is difficult to follow, and the viewer is forced to repeatedly readjust to the storyline at times. But in the end Medicine Man is redeemed by Connery's chauvinistic roguishness and overwhelming and lavish scenery. It's not great, but Medicine Man is quite worthwhile. J.A.

OFFBEAT VIDEOS

BIGGER THAN BRUCE LEE - THE FILMS OF JACKIE CHAN

by John Galligan & Jon Haber

While U.S. action stars like Schwarzenegger and Stallone are famous world-wide, Jackie Chan, the star of over 40 Hong Kong action pictures and one of the world's best-loved film heroes is sadly unknown to the mass of American video renters.

Jackie Chan, a former circus acrobat, began his movie career in the boiler factory Hong Kong film industry in the 1970's as a possible replacement for the late Bruce Lee. It was a scary time for the Hong Kong industry. With Lee as the only karate star to have impacted the American market, the question remained of who would replace him.

The Bruce clones (Bruce Li, Bruce Lo, Tiger Lee, and Jackie Chan in his early films) marched in lock-chop with the fallen Lee's dour demeanor and Eastwoodian grimness, coming across with all the mirth of Captain Kirk performing brain surgery with a rusty coffee can lid.

However, Chan soon learned to have fun with karate film conventions. By mixing the traditional elements of martial arts movies (revenge, secret fortresses, fights breaking out in noodle shops) with very broad slapstick comedy, Chan struck gold in a string of amazingly successful action comedies such as Drunken Fist Boxing, Fearless Hyena II and Jackie Chan's Police Force, eventually surpassing Lee as the biggest martial-arts star in the universe.

Chan's early serious karate films include The New Fist of Fury, The Young Tiger, Snake Fist Fighter and other titles mentioned in his filmography. While mostly indistinguishable from the films of other Lee wannabees, some early Chan films are dragged out of the ordinary. The no-budget Shaolin Wooden Men, for example, featured Jackie running a gauntlet of life-size Rockum-Sockum Robots to prove his skill to Shaolin masters. Offbeat - yes! But nothing like the zany characters and situations populating his later karate comedies.

Fantasy Mission Force, a film which holds a machine gun to the head of conventional linear plotting, is one of Chan's wackiest. In this alleged World War II tale, Jackie and a seven samurai-like team of adventurers travel from war-time Shanghai to Luxembourg (by jeep) battling Amazon babes from hell, ghosts, vampires, Road Warrior- style punks and Nazi's driving late model Fords. Definitely a movie for folks who found The Prisoner too predictable.

Any self-respecting video shop should have a healthy collection of Jackie Chan's movies in their Martial Arts or Action/Adventure sections. COMEDY

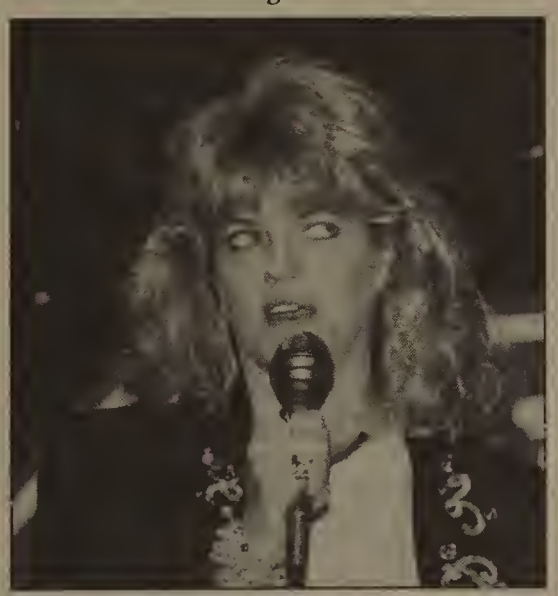
LAUGH AT ME, I'M A POLITICIAN



by Tobin Streett

Boston Politics hit Nick's Comedy Stop last Wednesday night. In a benefit for Jane Doe (a special project of the Mass. Coalition for Battered Women and Children), a gathering of our local politicos donated their time in an effort to raise money and let the public see their human sides. Boston City Councilman "Dapper" O'Neil, State Treasurer Joe Malone, and U.S. Congressman Barney Frank were some of the more interesting comedians. Malone was virtually incomprehensible. Evidently, no one has told Joe that microphones need to be held above the waist to carry the sound of the human voice. O'Neil didn't need to do much more than arrive on stage before the audience started laughing. But O'Neil did have some interesting thoughts on the political world and was kind enough to share them with us. Jim Flaherty was the M.D. (Master of Disguises) and had the audience rolling in fits of laughter with his all-too-true portrayals of the Duke and Governor Weld. The arrival of Marjorie Clapprood was greeted by loud applause, followed by her announcement that she was suffering from PTSS - Post Traumatic Silber Syndrome. Clapprood got more laughs than anyone on this evening filled with some highs and many "middle-of-the-roads." WRKO's Jerry Williams hosted the evening which ended with a standout performance by local favorite Steve Sweeney. But this very special night at Nick's served its purpose. The audience witnessed a rare gathering of politicians, had a couple of laughs and Jane Doe raised a nice chunk of change.

"Dapper" O'Neill gives thanks to his audience.

Marjorie Clapprood opened fire on everything from the Republicans to John Silber.

Missing Persons

Untitled, Doris Salcedo, 1989

by Jannette Tucker

The Institute of Contemporary Art's annual "Currents" exhibition is taking a unique approach this year. They're focusing on what's not there to get a more meaningful understanding of what is there.

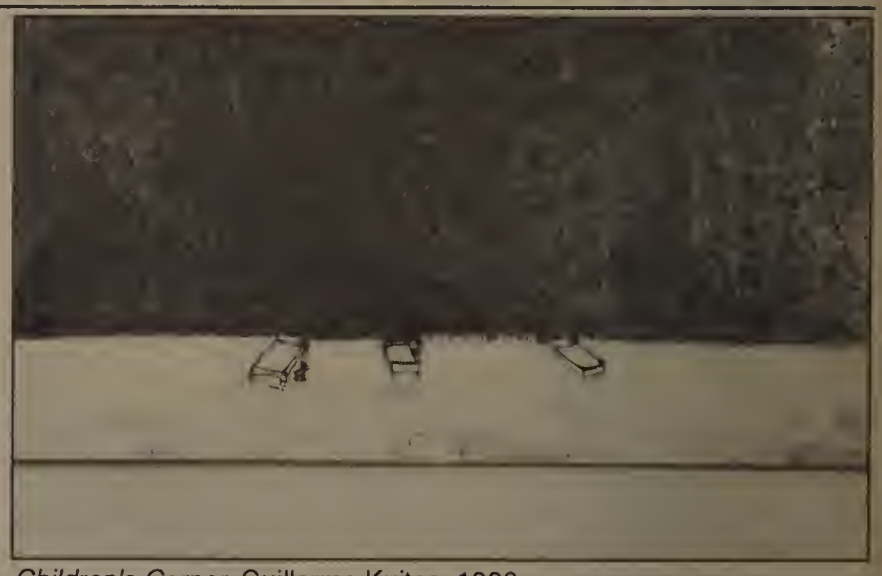
The six artists featured in "Currents: The Absent Body" focus on "the body suggested, whispered, conjured, but not depicted." It's disturbing; it's Freudian; it's mournful; it's introspective; it's intriguing and it's not to be missed.

At first glance, photographer Francesca Woodman doesn't seem to belong here. After all, her black and white, nearly technically perfect photographs depict a body: her body. But is it really her? Woodman, who committed suicide in 1981 at the age of 22, is purposefully ambiguous. Her work begs us to probe the oscillation. Is that her naked body shielding a face? Is she the object of these photographs, or does she, in fact, hold all of the power by taking the photographs of herself? Woodman successfully plays tricks with the viewer by creating constant tension between bodily presence and absence.

Woodman invites the viewer to ponder these questions by forcing people to come up close and really scrutinize her photographs. They're very small and require a physical closeness. But she's out of the frame before you can touch her, leaving only a blur where her body just was.

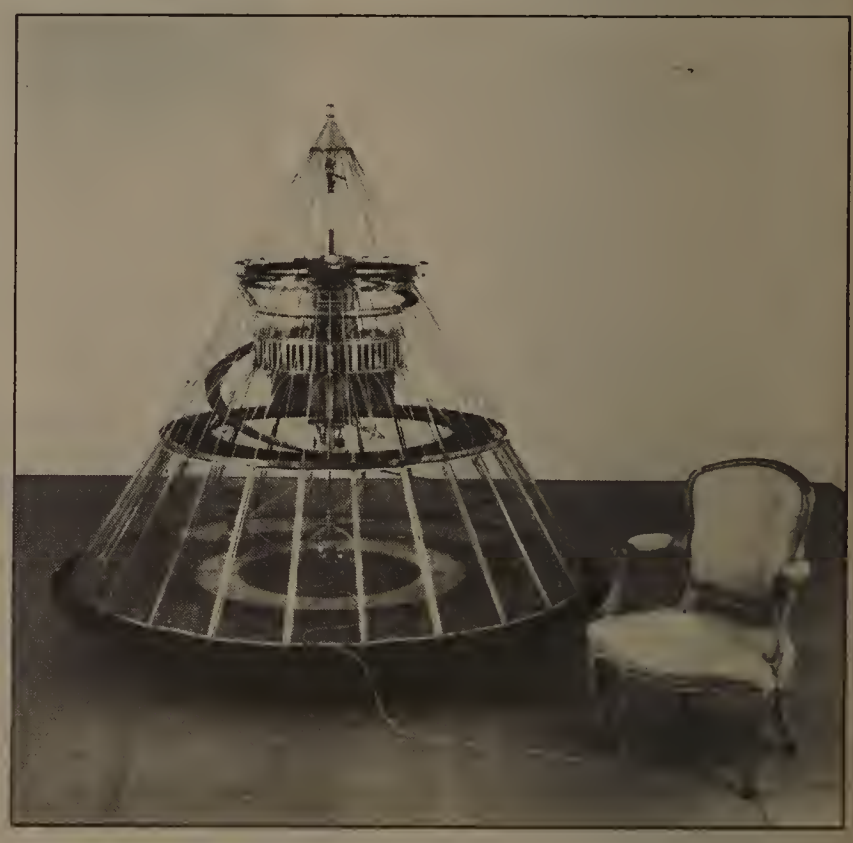
Argentinian Guillermo Kuitca deals with his absent body in terms of journeys, both inner and physical. In direct contrast to Woodman's photos, Kuitca's pieces force the viewer to take a few steps back. His interest in maps and mattresses, the forum in which these journeys take place, are fused together to carry out his vision.

"Suburban Beauty Rest" is a mattress with a street map imposed on it. Being the grandson of a Jewish immigrant from Odessa and the son of a psychoanalyst, the two mediums become one. The maps represent physical journeys undertaken by his ancestors. The mattress represents the subconscious mind journeys we all undergo while sleeping.



The trick in viewing this exhibit is in not overlooking the obvious. Let the pieces speak to you, and you'll quickly realize that the message is there, plain and simple.

One message not so simple, and perhaps the most disturbing of all exhibits at the "Currents" show, is Columbian Doris Salcedo's sculptures. Salcedo grapples with a monumental issue in a very personal and unique way. She deals with the deaths of her friends and family under military regimes and civil governments through keepsakes, namely their shoes. Being that shoes are extremely personal objects - we choose them and they mold to us - the personal aspect of the sense of loss to the survivors is apparent.



The installation includes empty boxes made from cow bladder. The shoes are embedded within the wall and also covered with cow bladder after Salcedo stitched them all in. Although the choice of using cow bladder is unclear, the effect is an eerie one. The shoes look like holograms. They become hazy through the membrane. It creates a serene quietness to the installation, all of which has an undertone of the violence which occurred for those shoes to be taken.

Salcedo also exhibits a crib made out of steel that no baby will ever occupy. Columbians believe that when you kill a man, you kill all generations that would have come from that man. So, the crib lies empty.

Also featured in the "Currents: The Absent Body" exhibit are New England based photographer Shellburne Thurber, Chilian painter Eugenio Dittborn and English sculptor Paul Etienne Lincoln.

Love Letters - A Rich and Rewarding Theatrical Outing

by Nancy Leonard

In its return engagement at the Wilbur Theatre, A.R. Gurney's Love Letters proves itself to be a wondrously crafted play. It's funny, touching, deftly observant and consistently engaging. The wonder is that it's all done in the guise of a staged reading. Two characters sit side by side, at a mahogany table, and read from the letters they've written to each other over a lifetime. The letters are not memorized, and their eyes never meet. But the exchanges slyly become a choreographed conversation - a sparkling dialogue in the form of questions, answers, and colorful snippets of personal information, cumulatively giving testimony to a deep affection between two dissimilar people.

Andrew Makepeace Ladd III and Melissa Gardner share the same background of WASP privilege, but take different paths. Filled with a sense of familial and social obligation, he excels at the right schools, goes into law, marries conventionally and becomes a senator. After her parents' divorce, she drifts into nonconformity and rebellion at school, then wallows through a couple of failed marriages, bouts with alcoholism and a disappointing art career.

He's straightlaced and wary of feelings. She craves affection and stability, but they're always out of reach. In their letters, they understand and listen to each other - something they often can't do in person or on the phone - admitting emotions and intimacies that would be shared with no other individual.

Gurney's wondrous craft is underscored by the various teams of actors who play the work. The diverse personalities and ages of the couple illuminate different aspects of the relationship. I'd always thought the first act was more interesting because it was more detailed, while the second act skimmed too quickly over too many years. But with an older couple - played by Richard Kiley and Lauren Bacall during week one - the second act is the one that shines. These two actors seemed closer to the awakening feelings of Gurney's middle-aged characters. Even when the acting is not fully in sync with the text, the playwright's craft is such that the audience seems not to notice. John Tillinger's direction scarcely was in place on opening night. The timing was off, and Miss Bacall needed more personality and less hesitancy as the young girl. The audience laughed immediately at the grade-school antics and tart remarks, but the reaction was more to the words than the performances. Mr. Kiley had a better sense of the actor's obligation to develop the character. His statements had more resonance, and his unspoken reactions were far more expressive. His reading of Andy's annual Christmas letter, and chagrined revision, was a high point. But both actors found the spark as Melissa's life started to fray, and the ending was truly moving. Love Letters reflects a vanished WASP America, as much as one couple's unique relationship. It's a rich and rewarding theatrical outing - and with a new pairing each week, likely to have a long stay in our midst.

WIDE AWAKE AT A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM

by Jamen Howe

"A Midsummer Nights Dream," playing at the Wang Center February 6-16, was a welcome break from frigid Boston nights. A ballet full of rolling fog, fairies, butterflies and children was the perfect anecdote to the inevitable mid-February blues. Set among tall trees and vines, in the thick of a lush forest, the ballet provided the illusion of life in another season, another place and another time. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was appropriate for an evening escape because it required only an emotional response. The images presented on stage had no relation to the depressing realities of today's world. This ballet was the exemplification of a child's naive imagination.

Daniel Meja as Puck in A Midsummer Night's Dream

The most memorable dancer in the ballet was Puck, played by Daniel Meja on the evening of February 7. His dancing was comical and lively. His body, full of energy, achieved amazing feats as he leaped, turned and rolled across the stage. During the course of the evening, Puck transformed magically from a man into a child, and then into an animal. Young boys with clear voices sang from the hidden orchestra pit, while hundreds of delicate girls dressed in ethereal, colorful costumes, ran about the stage carrying lights.

The most spectacular part of the ballet was at the end of Act II, during the wedding scene, performed to Mendelssohn's wedding march. The dancers wore sparkling tiaras, white tulle and sequins. Their movements were elegant, graceful and flowing. Sitting in the audience, I forgot my location for the few minutes of this final scene. The wedding march music, the scenery and the dancing swept me away to a beautiful world where parted lovers and friends are always reunited. "A Midsummer's Night Dream" was a retreat into an oasis of childhood fantasies and perfect love.

STAGE NOTES

by Nancy Leonard

GOD GAVE ROCK AND ROLL TO YOU

by Jannette Tucker

A photo of a man catches your eye at the Middle East. Is that someone bowing in some religious ceremony, seemingly in front of a fire?

No. It's John Zewizz from Sleep Chamber, and the "fire" is really just his hand in a blur.

But that's what's so intriguing about Cambridge photographer Cindy Bortman's black and white rock shots. Her exhibit, "God Gave Rock and Roll to You" is on display throughout February. Her photographs offer more to capture your attention than simple documentation. Elements of impressionism create quite a sample of unconventional photos.

Sleep Chamber, The Limelight, N.Y.C., 1991 Cindy Bortman

Current photographs include members of Sleep Chamber, Bullet LaVolta, Green Magnet School, Slaughter Shack, Men With No IQ's and Big Catholic Guilt. All local bands who play intimate clubs, not major concert halls.

Bortman does not use a flash so as to capture the moment as it was viewed: in a dark club with little light in the form of harsh, sharp, electrifying rays.

"It adds an art of element to the photos," Bortman said. "Since I take pictures of bands in no light, that's how they should look."

The Middle East, in turn, displays them in the same, dark lighting. It doesn't do much for the viewer who wants to take a close look, but it does add to the overall effect of extreme black and white. Her photographs have extremely high contrast-no gray areas. "It's extreme with no gray areas because in stage lighting, that's how it is."

Middle East promoter Chris Ritch talks proudly of Bortman, saying that her photographs "transcend the medium" in which they are presented. Bortman expands on that notion by agreeing that there is more to her pictures than simply freezing a moment.

"Even though they're about music, they're sort of quiet and serene and otherworldly," she says. "Even though you know there's a god-awful din going on, they capture a very quiet moment."

Bortman also prefers shots of non-interaction between band members.

"You know there's invisible telepathic communication going on because they're all playing the same song," she explains. "So I tend not to pick the ones where they're interacting with each other."

For more information, call the Middle East at 354-8238.

THE LEISURE STUDY

A what, when, where and how guide for your free time.

Boston's Ablaze!

Let the speed and fire of the Boston Blazers whisk you away to the world of Indoor Lacrosse, live at the Boston Garden. In their first year of play at the garden, the Blazers are only one and a half games out of first place in the Major Indoor Lacrosse League and are a sight to behold for anyone who's never seen indoor lacrosse. Led by goaltender Dan O'Neill, the Blazers hold a 2-2 record and fight it out against the New York Saints on February 28 at 8:00p.m. With top players like O'Neill and forward Glen Stevens, the Blazers are sure to be contenders for the league championship, to be held later in March. Tickets for games range between $12 and $17 and can be purchased at the Boston Garden box office, or by calling 227-3206. Check for student discounts.

The Bear Facts

How much do we really know about bears? Besides Winnie The Pooh and the Bruins, there are many breeds of lesser known bears that we won't see wandering around this city too often. Running through May 10, BEARS: IMAGINATION AND REALITY looks at the habits and habitats of these furry creatures and examines the bear as an icon in different cultures. The exhibit displays more than 25 taxidermic mounts of young and adult, grizzly and black bears. Some parts of the exhibition illustrate the decline of the once abundant bear population, while others illuminate the "humanized world of the teddy bear." And you don't have to be a child to enjoy a performance of The House at Pooh Corner. Be sure not to miss this fascinating look into the mysterious world of the bear. Call 723-2500 to make a date with the bears.

Tack-ling the Great Outdoors

Feel like you should be taking advantage of these cold, winter days before they're no longer? We have the perfect sport for you. Put on your mittens, fill a thermos with coffee and head for the ice to catch some fish. As ancient as the Eskimos and as elusive a sport as turkey hunting, fishermen are still braving the cold in hopes of reeling one in. Drilling the hole can be a tiring process made easier by rotating the work, so it's best attempted in groups of at least three people. (To make it even easier, look for an old hole only slightly iced over.) New England ice fishermen can expect to find Trout, Northern Pike and Pickerel still active in the chilly waters. A few pointers when choosing your fishing hole location and tools: shiny synthetic lures work well in high sunlight whereas live bait works well for lower light levels and deeper waters. For more information, we recommend a call to Arlington Bait and Tackle at 646-5598.

Cooking up a Zoo

If you're planning a winter party and want a special flair to accompany your feast, ask our Specialty Foods Critic, Seymour Kaubalz, for a recommendation. He joins the likes of Julia Child and members of the British Consul as a shopper of Savenors market at 92 Kirkland Street in Cambridge. Savenors specializes in hard-to-find game animals, prime beef and naturally raised products. Meat Manager, Lyle Morgan says, "If we don't have it, we can get it." Some delicacies he can "get" are rattlesnake, black bear brains, lamb hearts and camel. "Sometimes we can get bear brains but they're very hard to obtain right now. They go for 30 to $40 a pound." Sound expensive? "It is a bit pricey," says Seymour, "but it's worth it. It's usually between the lamb hearts, which I can really sink my teeth into, or something lighter, like the brains. Unlike most brain connoisseurs, I like to sprinkle salt on them and nibble slowly, while watching a rerun of Wild Kingdom." I've been eating brains more than my usual once a week because Savenors hasn't had a large stock of camel meat. "We're not seeing as much camel anymore," says Morgan. "They've made it [the camel] into a dairy animal so they're not killing them." As disappointing as this may be to Seymour, he isn't too upset. "The day that Savenors runs out of something I like is the day I turn Vegetarian!" Call Savenors for special orders at 547-1765.

Murder Can Be Fun

You're so angry that you could kill your next door neighbor but you realize that could get you into a good deal of trouble. So you wander over to the video store but their copy of Henry: Portrait of a Serial Killer is out. So what do you do? Travel over to The Primal Plunge at 107 Brighton Ave., Allston, and pick up a copy of Murder Can Be Fun. Read how some of the worst killers "offed" their victims or how certain celebs bought the big one. This alternative rag exposes the grim facts behind the scandals (Issue 5 reveals that silent screen star Fatty Arbuckle did not, in fact, fatally slam a Coke bottle into Virginia Rappé; she suffered from a fatal case of chronic cystitis). MCBF also explains, in layman's terms, the effects of typhoid via Issue 6's exposé on Typhoid Mary. Sure, it's gruesome, but it's also informative. It's only 70¢ an issue and proprietor Anne Beinecke promises that she always carries this and other twisted publications. Call 787-1318 for more info.

Dashing Through The Snow

For outdoor types who crave action, why not try snowmobiling? And, no, you don't need to break the bank to enjoy this thrill. Town and Country Arctic Cat snowmobile rental center in East Conway, New Hampshire will provide you with a luxury snowmobile for $32 an hour, $100 for four hours or $150 for a full, eight-hour day. You have your choice of speeding along groomed and marked mountains, fields and wood trails at your own pace, or of taking guided tours. LA TRENDS

The Improper Bostonian's L.A. Trends Analyst, Louis C. Horowitz, reports on the trends of Los Angeles. One of the leading analyst/surfers in the country, Horowitz claims that the apparent impression from most west coast hipsters is that Bostonians "piss conservatism."

"I'll keep you informed of the trends as they're happening. As an ex-Bostonian, I remember the embarrassment I felt after moving to L.A. I was laughed at by a bartender after asking for a lime in my beer. There's passé and then there's total ignorance. In L.A., you grow to learn the difference very quickly. Learning the ins and outs is important if you want to be taken seriously by the trend setters. Being a trend setter is a different story.

Boston shouldn't have to wait ten months before it catches wind of the truly trendy. Many trends that begin in L.A. are nearly dead by the time Bostonians start sporting them. And trust me. There aren't many trend analysts who want a Bostonian to be with the scene as it's happening. They're a giant step away from being hip." Here's the news: In '91, it was sideburns. In '92, it's nose hair. Let them grow about a 1/2 inch and show em off. . . The social scene - add some pepper to your beer (no more than five shakes) and you'll be doing the right thing! . . . Tired of saying "goodbye" on the phone, try the new word that's burning up the L.A. phone lines: "Lah Tah.". . . A Catch 22 for Beggars: If approved, pan handlers in Santa Monica will have to pay for "begging licenses". Legalized begging isn't only a sign of the times - it's a California solution.

BUDGET BITES

Le Grand Cafe

by Meg Worden & Peter McNamara

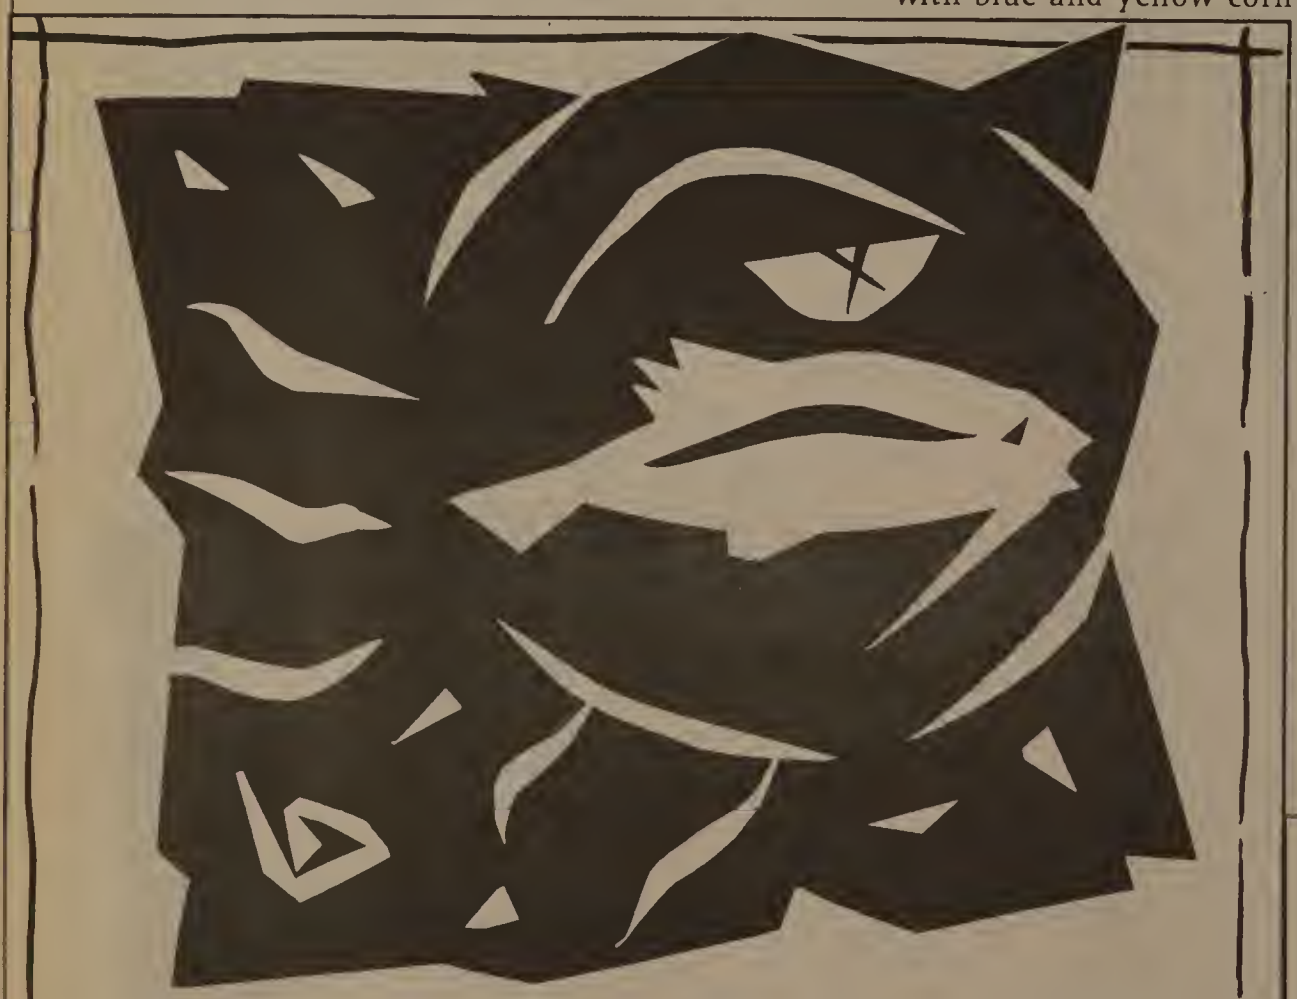
"Doesn't anyone eat dinner in Back Bay any more?" That question troubled us as we sat in the near-empty Le Grand Cafe the other evening. We had a wonderful meal, and the only disappointment was that so few customers were there to appreciate the food.

To start with, everything is priced under $10.00. Add to that the imaginative menu, generous portions, delicious food and friendly, attentive service and you have the makings of a real winner.

Under new management since last November, Le Grand Cafe (soon to be redecorated in the style of a French bistro) is a tiny restaurant where everything is prepared from scratch, and where a conscious effort is made to keep the prices at reasonable levels.

Whether you're looking for a light bite, a complete dinner or just coffee and dessert, the menu has something just for you. Appetizers are admittedly a little pricey at $5.50-$6.95, but are big enough for two to share. The spicy grilled shrimp is outstanding - wrapped in pancetta, subtly spicy and perfectly complemented by a black bean salad. The seven layer dip (sour cream, refried beans, tomato, salsa, jack cheese, black olives, guacamole and scallions, served with blue and yellow corn chips) is hearty and satisfying. The moreish quesadillas, filled with grilled eggplant, roasted peppers and goat cheese, come with such an addictive hot salsa that we requested seconds.

Le Grand Cafe
651 Boylston Street, Boston
Telephone 437-6400.
Hours: Open daily for breakfast, lunch & dinner.
Credit Cards: AE, MC, V, Discover.
No Reservations
Handicapped: Front section accessible but bathroom down flight of stairs.



Main courses are listed under "Pasta" and "Bistro Fare", and prices for these hearty portions range from $7.50-$9.95. Risotto is a notoriously difficult dish to prepare, and the shrimp mi feta, (shrimp served on a risotto flavored with tomatoes, feta cheese and capers) was truly excellent. The only dish we could fault was the roast pork shoulder; it was sliced too thin, resulting in a dry and reheated taste. We've learned that this problem has since been resolved. It came with white beans (too undercooked, unfortunately) in a terrific dense tomato based sauce with smoked bacon and kale.

A large selection of sandwiches ranging from $4.95-$6.95 provide an alternative to the cooked fare. Sizes are more than generous, and of particular note are the falafel pita sandwich with baba ganoush and tahini sauce (and so much garlic we had to rush out to buy breath mints).

Of the very memorable desserts, the home made triple layer chocolate cake deserves a special mention, if not a medal. It comes in a serving so gigantic it could easily serve two, if not three! The coffee, too, did not let us down.

The wine list is small, but inexpensive. Most wines are available by the glass, the carafe or the half carafe. We particularly recommend the chianti, which was so soft and smooth, it tasted good with everything.

As we left, we saw a couple standing outside reading the menu, trying to decide if they should go in or not. We did what anyone would have done under the circumstances - we told them they would be missing a treat if they didn't try the restaurant. We certainly hope to go back soon.

Taste the ~~Old~~ New Southwest!

It's more fresh and alive at the Cactus Club than ever! Featuring traditional and innovative foods at affordable prices. We got it all! Choose from our Daily Specials, Fresh Fish selection, or our "Heart Smart" and Vegetarian dishes. Our Hearty Brunch is sure to please any hungry crowd. It's Southwestern cuisine in the heart of Boston, just acoss from the Hynes Convention Center.

So whether you have a taste for nachos with all the fixings, a sizzling fajita and a cold margarita, or something just a little out of the ordinary come on down and relax with a taste of the "New Southwest".

The Movable Feast
THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN'S RESTAURANT REVIEW

NOBLE HOUSE

by Al Stankus

Melanie Dunea

While the "Food Police" agreed with our assessment of the Eastern Pier Chinese Seafood Restaurant (last issue), they cited me for misinformation. In question was the blanket remark that outside of Chinatown you couldn't find menus brimming with Hong Kong seafood.

"What about the Noble House?" they asked. Oh, the Noble House, how soon one forgets.

For a few years now, the lovely Noble House in Coolidge Corner has gone where no other Brookline Chinese restaurant has ventured. Out where Szechuan reigns supreme, the Noble House has brought Cantonese and Hong Kong cooking to what's heretofore been a one-dimensional Chinese food outpost. However, aware of the power of the Peking Ravioli, the restaurant also serves up a sizable number of Szechuan-style dishes.

Notable among these offerings are two shrimp dishes. The one called Lake Tung Shrimp ($11.75) uses beautiful Gulf shrimp and a varied mix of vegetables and binds them in a tame thick wine sauce. The superb Yu Hsiang Jumbo Prawn ($11.75) is a dish more in line with what Westerners know as Szechuan food. The large and perfectly-cooked shrimp find some heat in a well-balanced sauce that brings together vinegar, chiles and garlic.

Although we would have loved to have more of the chewy conch in the special Szechuan Conch Chowder ($3.75), Noble House must be rewarded for both its creativity and chutzpah in coming up with such a dish. At the base is a rich, fairly spicy stock that's like a thick Manhattan-style chowder with chiles. To this, they add some crunchy sprouts, a few julienned vegetables and strips of conch and a delightfully salty and very firm warm water mollusk. Think of it as hot and sour Manhattan Conch Chowder.

Starters that are meant for sharing include the steamed clams smothered with a salty black bean sauce ($9.75) and the deep-fried squid ($9.25). A crunchy dish of rings and tentacles done up in a light batter, the squid is served with a dry dipping sauce that combines salt with thickly-cracked black peppers.

From the list of seafood specials, the salmon with snow peas ($14) proved to be a disappointment. There was nothing wrong with the impeccably fresh salmon or crisp snow peas. However, the overly-thickened, almost gelatinous sauce that surrounded the food added nothing but glunk to the dish. A nouvelle-influenced preparation such as this would have been better served with a fragrant sauce that was more judiciously coated on the fish and vegetables.

The Noble House has an extensive, albeit expensively-priced selection of well-prepared vegetables. Good choices to brighten up and lighten up the meal include any of the greens - broccoli, watercress, and spinach ($7.25—$7.75) - that are stir-fried with garlic.

In the noodle department (dubbed pasta on the menu; after all, this is Brookline), the kitchen shines. and at prices that peak at $7.95, the wider-range of noodle dishes also represent the best bargains on the menu. There's a chow foon dish, here called rice noodles, in which the thick and wonderfully gummy chow foon noodles are napped with a light stock reduction sauce and tossed with sauteed onions and thin slices of what certainly tasted like top-of-the-line grilled sirloin.

The restaurant has a full liquor license, but with tastes so varied, Tsingtao Beer would truly be the best match for the plethora of flavors.

One other note; on Saturday and Sunday, Noble House serves dim sum from noon to 3 p.m. However, unlike Chinatown or Hong Kong, where steaming carts bearing the small orders are pushed through the room, here, you order individual plates. It's a good, if unauthentic introduction to this wonderful way of snacking.

California Chardonnay

by Al Stankus

There we were at the Blue Wave eating their bargain-priced roast chicken and drinking some squarely-priced Merlot when four women approached the bar. As the bartender moved towards them, he was told, "Three Chardonnays and a Diet Coke."

Once upon a vine, the order would have been "Three glasses of Chablis" or maybe even the more generic, "Three glasses of white wine."

In both cases they would have been served three glasses of lousy jug wine, dubbed California Chablis. The irony here is that in France, Chablis is made from the Chardonnay grape and in its Grand Cru and Premier Cru states is one of the most noble white wines in the world. In California, it's a marketing tool that signifies "no grape." What you have is a nice name with no legal boundaries which gives producers the leeway to bottle the pressings of cheap grapes. In taste, California Chablis is a flowery-tasting liquid that's simply awful to drink.

Over the years, the overwhelming majority of "white wine by the glass drinkers" have unmasked these generic white wines. Today everyone wants Chardonnay. In some bars you'll even hear, "What kind of Chardonnay are you pouring by the glass?"

Martignetti's is so caught up in this phenomena that they carry 108 different California Chardonnays. It's overkill, but the question most frequently asked is, "Can you help me find a good Chardonnay for under $10?" Yet in a country that produces almost 550 different Chardonnays, it's not so easy to come up with many "good" Chardonnays under $10.

The real market isn't under $10, but in that range of moderately-expensive wines priced around $14-$23 a bottle. When the customer increases their spending pool, the choices roll off my tongue even easier.

But there's really only one kind of California Chardonnay; a big, very rich, almost viscous, rather oaky wine which has hints of vanilla and butterscotch. These tastes and characteristics are what made California Chardonnay so popular in the first place. To drink anything less like Fetzer Sundial, Estancia, Belvedere and Napa Ridge is to drink Chardonnay in name only.

In that elusive "under $10" category, there are enough of these characteristics in both the '90 Hess Select, '90 Buena Vista Carneros and '90 Meridien to qualify them as "best buys."

Jumping up a notch ($11-$20), classic Chardonnay characteristics will come across from the '89 Burgess, '90 MacCrostie, '90 Sanford, '90 St. Clement, '90 DeLoach and '90 Logan. In general, most '90s came out better than the '89s which suffered (except those from the Central Coast) from late season rains.

And if you're looking for the ultimate Chardonnay experience, grab Kistler's Dutton Ranch ($28). Don't worry about the vintage, as any year from this wonderful producer results in a wine of enormous flavor with a finish that simply begs to linger. Other Chardonnays in this league ($20-$30) include Far Niente, Hanzell, Talbott, Trefethen and Cakebread.

Don't despair if you missed the recent First Annual Boston Wine Expo; you can always participate instead at the Boston Harbor Hotel's ongoing third annual Boston Wine Festival. Here, great wines from around the world are matched with specially-designed gourmet dinners. Many tastings and seminars have been scheduled through April 10. Fine Italian wines will be highlighted during the week beginning February 17; for information about these and future tastings, call 330-9355 or 439-7000.

While on the subject of wine, a Tysling wine dinner is scheduled for March 3, at Watertown's On the Square (9 Galen St.), when David Abbot, Marketing Director of Tysling Vineyard, will present some of these excellent wines. Cost is $55.00; for information call 923-1522.

Workshops in the fine art of pizza, pasta and soup making will be held at the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts on February 21, 29 and March 9 respectively. For further details, call 354-3836.

After a long stay in Italy, Rosario Del Nero has at last returned to the kitchen at Buoniconti's (143 First St., Cambridge, tel. 491-3663). Rosario is co-author of Risotto: a Taste of Milan, a fascinating collection of recipes and anecdotes.

So many rib places in the city claim to have the best ribs around, but which is really the best? Well perhaps this issue will finally be settled: our sources tell us that Boston just might be in for a Big Rib Cookoff some time in the near future. We'll keep you posted.

The Rattlesnake Bar and Grill at 382 Boylston St., Boston, tel. 859-8555 has just introduced a fantastic and flavorful new menu incorporating Food of the Americas. Expect to find dishes from Central America, the Caribbean and South America whipped up by new chef Paul McDonough, formerly at the Meridien Hotel.

The food at the East Coast Grill (1271 Cambridge St., Cambridge) is just great, but it can be exasperating waiting for a table. However, you can make reservations when special dinners are being featured on Monday evenings. February 24 is Sick of Healthy Food Night, and will include fried chicken, duck confit, pork chicharones, whole roast smoked sirloin, grilled banana split and other wicked delights. The cost is just $19.00 for three courses. For reservations call 491-6568.

Congratulations to Jane Lavine, newly elected Chairperson of the prestigious American Institute of Wine and Food. Jane is, of course, well known as co-owner of the event planning company, Abracadabra, and co-editor of the Zagat Boston Restaurant Guide.

A quick restaurant roundup: 29 Newbury has a brand new menu and a brand new decor to match...The Harborwatch Restaurant (formerly the Quarterdeck) at Pier 6 in Charlestown (just a Skip with Jerry across the harbor) will be reopening soon under a new name...Jake's Barbecue in the South End is no longer in operation, but the owners have promised to reopen in a new location...We're sorry to report that Lulu's Backyard has temporarily (we hope) stopped serving dinner, but the bar is still open on weekends...We now hear that the opening of Amsterdam's is postponed until February 20; you can call 426-1111 to verify, or watch this space for more updates.

Eat at long, family-style tables with other patrons. Indulge in oysters at the newly refurbished raw bar. Lunch is also served at the piano bar. Reserve for parties of 15 or more. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

East Coast Grill
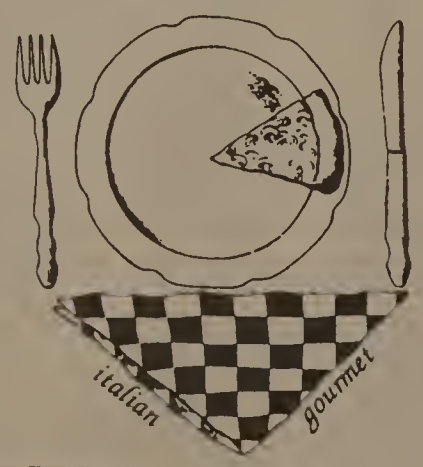
Deservedly the critics rave, this tiny "fun and funky" spot offers excellent cuisine and a lively atmosphere to a packed house nightly. Southern BBQ and fresh fish specials cooked on a wood-burning grill. Try the Jamaican beef from hell (beef strips, sugar cane and spices), mahi mahi with mango chutney, and for the brave, add a dash of Wow to your giant plate with one of four distinctive Inner Beauty Hot Sauces. Dinner nightly. On weekends, expect a wait. Reservations.



El Phoenix Room
1430 Commonwealth Ave., Brighton 566-8590
Self proclaimed, "the oldest Mexican restaurant in Boston", El Phoenix Room provides Spanish American ambiance and cheap eats to regulars daily. Wash down superb chile and bulging burritos with a few Dos Equis. Don't let the ramshackle facade intimidate you. Luncheon specials for the frugal diner at $2.95. No reservations.

Felicia's
145A Richmond St., Bos. 523-9885
AM,D,MC,V
Old-fashioned family-style dining in the North end. Twirl up some Southern Italian chow and keep your eyes peeled for such personalities as Steve Martin and Bob Hope. DINING

This casually elegant dining spot corners the international market on gourmet specialities. Some favorites of the Harvard Sq. crowd are the salad bar, cheese and chocolate fondues and Greek spinach pie. Imbibe Cambridge ale (the real stuff that doesn't give hangovers) at the bar; or warm your toes by one of three roaring firesides. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Icarus
Melt your mouth but not your wings at this informal but sophisticated American regional restaurant in the South End. Dine at mahogany tables under softly lighted period fixtures. A favorite appetizer on the ever-changing menu is the polenta with braised wild mushrooms. Compliment your breast of veal stuffed with porcini and portobello mushrooms, braised with roast garlic and sage, with one of 100 choice wines. Enjoy jazz at the bar every Fri. Casual dress. Dinner daily. Sun. brunch is served 11am-3pm.

India Quality Restaurant
536 Comm. Ave., Kenmore Sq., Bos.267-4499
India Quality offers a wide variety of authentic North Indian cuisine amid, cozy and relaxed atmosphere. Luncheon specials vary from $4.25 - $5.95 (11:30 - 3:00) and daily dinner specials $6.95 - $10.95 (5 - 10pm). Special breads $2.95 (stuffed with spinach, potatoes, meat, mint). Dine in or take out. 10% student discount on all entres.

India Samraat
51A Massachusetts Ave., Bos. 247-0718
Stroll into this genuine Indian restaurant and sample some chicken tikka masala, a favorite of their regulars. Try another popular specialty dish, the non-vegetarian Thali. Service is excellent in this exposed-brick interior and Indian paintings adorn the walls. Samraat also offers take out and delivery. Lunch from 12-3pm and dinner 5-11pm weeknights, 12-11pm on weekends.

Jasper's
Jasper White is rightly lauded for his waterfront establishment's outstanding consistency. The service is impeccable without being snooty, the decor pleasantly contemporary and the food sublime. Jasper likes to take simple plebeian dishes and add to them subtle nuances and spice. Try the signature pan roasted lobster with chevril and chives and the baked chocolate bread and butter pudding for dessert. Appropriate dress. Open Tue.-Sat. for dinner.

Kebab'N'Kurry
This small basement restaurant offers an extensive menu. The nan (Indian bread) is superb, often stuffed with potatoes and other goodies. Order a maharani thaali (Queen's platter) and sample a variety of dishes including; dal (lentils), paneer (cheese in a curried sauce) chickpeas and basmati rice. Open daily for lunch (except Sun.) and dinner.

King & I
You won't find Yule Brenner; but you will find great Thai food. Try the chicken and coconut soup and the shrimp in love. Open daily for lunch (except Sat.) and dinner.

Legal Sea Foods
Park Plaza Hotel, 27 Columbus Ave., Bos. 426-4444 A,D,MC,V
5 Cambridge Ctr., Kendall Sq., Camb. 864-3400
Legals, rightly known as Boston's best fish house, has an unquestioned standard of excellence. Founder George Berkowitz lives by his motto, "If it's not fresh, it's not Legal". In fact, all the fish is personally inspected on the boats. One of many highlights is the Seafood casserole - a medley of salmon, scallops, shrimp and scrod. Open Mon.-Fri. for lunch and dinner. Weekends, dinner menu only.

Opened in 1875, Locke-Ober's has been visited by such personalities as Marilyn Monroe, Joe DiMaggio, E.E. Cummings and the infamous Kennedys. The mahogany floors and chandeliers add to the "Turn of the Century" look at this Brahmin institution which serves up Continental and New England cuisine. Always a highlight is the Lobster Savannah (shelled, diced lobster prepared in a cream sauce with pimentos, bell peppers, mushrooms, sherry and Parmesan cheese). Lunch served Mon.-Fri. Dinner daily. Jacket and tie required.

Mary Chung Restaurant
447 Massachusetts Ave., Camb.
This inexpensive Chinese joint located in Central Sq. is always full. The menu offers good Szechuan in heaping portions. Be sure to try Mary's specialty, a spicy broth with pork dumplings, bean sprouts and veggies.

Rattlesnake
382 Boylston St., Bos. 859-8555
This serpentine-style restaurant and bar sports an inlaid python skin on the bar and a new Food of The Americas menu that's sure to wet your whistle. Try the grilled salmon with pumpkin salsa and mango relish or the pepper pot stew, a low calorie blend of meat and vegetables served over rice. And if you still need a little lubrication, sip one of their inspirational margaritas. Open from 11:30 to 2am on weekdays and 12pm to 2am on weekends.

Ristorante Marino
See food prepared right before your eyes from behind a big picture window. Dine in a large atrium under a glass roof on one of several organic and chemical-free dishes. Marino owns several farms from where all the produce and meats originate. His farm in Natick (87 Pleasant St.) is open to the public. Try their porchetti, daily pig specials. Lunch Mon-Sat. Open daily for dinner.

Rocco's
Dine on an all-Italian menu which includes vermicelli puttanesca (pasta with an olive oil tomato sauce, capers and shallots), and don't miss their grilled green salad (greens marinated in olive oil and grilled). You'll dine under cathedral high ceilings and play with the folk art pieces on each table-they're for sale. Frescoes of putti and hanging sculptured suits add to Rocco's overall cheer. Desserts, including apricot bread pudding are the best part, so save room! You can sit at the long cherry wood bar that also functions as a gallery. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Shalimar of India
This Indian dive/restaurant at Central Sq. specializes in Northern Indian cuisine. After some pakoras (spinach and cauliflower deep-fried in chickpea batter) and raita (yogurt and cucumber), choose from several chicken and shrimp tandoori (baked in a clay oven) and curry plates. Lunch Mon.-Sat. Dinner daily. Relax over chaiy (Indian tea) at the Sun. buffet-style brunch from 12:00-3pm.

Sorento's
86 Peterborough St., Bos. 424-7070
MC,V
Enjoy a wide variety of scrumptious Italian dishes, at very reasonable prices. The gourmet pizzas are mouth-watering. The casual atmosphere and quick and friendly service all make for a quaint little Italian restaurant. Free delivery is also offered in a limited area.

St. Botolph Restaurant
Dine in a trendy polished café or eat more formally upstairs. Either way, you'll love the Italian (café fare) and Continental cuisine (upstairs) offered at this charming brownstone establishment. One critics' pick is the noisettes of lamb with tarragon fettucini, goat cheese and spinach topped off with an ample slice of white chocolate cheesecake. Open daily for lunch and dinner. Sun. brunch 11:30am-3pm.

Union Oyster House
Opened in 1826, this Boston landmark is the oldest restaurant in continuing business in the U.S. Their raw oyster bar, where you can still gobble down oysters, littlenecks and cherrystones, was often a hangout for Daniel Webster. If raw isn't your bag, you can order up the popular crab cakes in Newburg sauce or broiled scrod. Open daily for lunch and dinner.

Victoria Station
64 Sleeper St., Bos. 542-7771 MC,V,A,D,D
Located next to the Children's Museum and overlooking Boston Harbor and the Boston Tea Party Ship, you'll experience casual dining in a railroad atmosphere surrounded by authentic 'Victoria Station' artifacts. Early-bird specials include prime rib and seafood specialties. Pub menu available until midnight. Open Sun.-Sat., 11:30am to 1am.

Roberta Dowling*of the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts*

by Marge Chryssostomidis & Peter McNamara

Roberta Dowling, the founder, president and executive chef of the Cambridge School of Culinary Arts and DeGustibus, Inc., a gourmet catering service, has been making a major impact on the local restaurant scene for many years. Roberta's first teaching experience in Boston was at Madeleine Kamman's groundbreaking Modern Gourmet cooking school After founding the CSCA in 1975, Roberta studied with Marcella Hazan in Italy. Her cooking school is the only federally accredited private cooking school in Massachusetts. Unlike the larger schools that have an "industrial" approach, the CSCA training follows the tradition of European cooking schools, emphasizing the theory and practice of fine dining. Many of her graduates can be found in the kitchens of some of Boston's better restaurants; chances are, if you've dined at Davio's, Buoniconti's, Olive's, Hamersley's Bistro or the Harvest, you've eaten something prepared by one of them. In addition to training professional chefs, Roberta also offers workshops and seminars for the non professional regardless of level of experience. Despite her many administrative duties, teaching remains Roberta's first love, and she always makes a point of working with her students; this focus on individual attention is no doubt a factor in the success of the CSCA. Roberta has generously offered to share this hearty winter soup recipe with us:

Roberta Dowling's Cream of Potato Soup with Pesto

3 tbls. unsalted butter
3 leeks, white part only, finely chopped
2 lbs. potatoes, peeled, cut in cubes
2 quarts chicken stock
1 1/2 - 2 cups heavy cream salt and pepper to taste pinch of nutmeg
2 - 3 drops lemon juice pesto sauce (you can use bought, or see recipe below)
1/3 cup Romano cheese, grated
1/3 cup Parmesan cheese, grated

In a food processor, using chopping blade, process pine nuts with two tablespoons of the oil until you have a smooth paste. Add the garlic and process until well combined and smooth. Add basil and salt and process further, adding the cheeses and remaining oil a little at a time until you have a very smooth puree, similar to a mayonnaise. Correct seasoning.

Melt butter in a saucepan over a medium heat, add leeks and cook until very soft. Add potatoes and stock and cook until the potatoes are very soft. Drain, reserving the liquid. Rub the potatoes through a sieve. Add cream and enough of the reserved liquid to make a thick cream soup. Return to the heat and bring to a simmer. Season with salt, pepper, nutmeg and lemon juice. Ladle the soup into individual bowls and swirl in one tablespoon of pesto. Serves 8-10.

Pesto Sauce

2 tblsp. pine nuts
1/2-2/3 cup olive oil
2 large garlic cloves, germ removed
2 cups packed, flawless basil leaves, washed and dried very well
1/2 tsp. salt

AT SOME SALONS, THE IDEA OF A GOOD HAIRCUT IS PRACTICALLY MEDIEVAL.

But not at Linear. As part of our service guarantee, you'll receive:
• A stress-relieving treatment that will penetrate and soothe your scalp, shoulders, and neck.
• At the chair you'll be offered coffee, tea, or mineral water—and it's never served in a paper cup.
• And for women, after we cut your hair, we'll touch up your makeup and help you find the right cosmetics.
If we forget anything mentioned, then the cut's on us.

The Cavedogs Satisfy Their Primal Instincts

by Rey Roldan

Way back in the dawn of man, a caveman taught his dog how to play guitar. Man evolved and built keyboards, synthesizers and other devices to satisfy his need for technology. Meanwhile, the poor old cavedog struggled away with his attempts to create the perfect pop song to satisfy its primal needs. In the process, he also taught a group of Byrds and Beatles the same techniques. Thousands of years later, a trio of the dog's descendents got together and began writing those "perfect pop songs" and added a bass and drumkit to balance out the sound. Compiling those songs on an album called Joyrides for Shut-Ins (Enigma/Capitol), the Cavedogs recorded a record that sounds great just because. There's nothing flashy about their music. No mindless disco beats. No cheesed-up, tight skirts. Just pure, unadulterated melodic pop that the Byrds would have written if they teamed up with Teenage Fan Club.

Armed with a brand new album, Soul Martini (release date: Feb. 25 on Capitol), the Cavedogs have returned to attack the airwaves with a slightly different, more mature sound. "We just wanted to make a record that sounded how we sound live," said guitarist Todd Spahr. Unlike Joyrides for Shut-Ins, which was a collection of previously recorded tracks on radio tapes and early singles, Soul Martini was their first full recording. "The biggest difference was being able to sit down with twenty songs that we'd demo'd up and choose which ones we wanted to re-record for the album," said drummer Mark Rivers.

Part of their maturation included developing a musical atmosphere for Soul Martini. While Joyrides... has a careening two-dimensional sound, Soul Martini adds depth to the mix, creating an aural ambiance. "We wanted to record things differently to give it texture," said bassist Brian Stevens. "We changed things from song to song, so that every track sounded different from the last one." Although they developed an epic sound, they didn't lose sight of what it means to be a Cavedog. "There's still that pop thingy in there," Rivers added. "I still hear those 'oohs' and 'ahhs'."

Although they're known to the media as primarily a Boston band, the band members are not native to New England. Spahr and Stevens "hung out together" in Miami and moved to Boston because that was where the music was happening. While searching for a drummer, Rivers "just sorta popped out of nowhere [Atlanta] and the three of us started jamming." After signing with Enigma Records in 1989, the band released Joyrides... in 1990 (which won critical raves nationwide). Soon afterwords, however, Enigma went bankrupt and the fate of the band was left wide open. After seeing other Boston bands such as O Positive, Figures on a Beach and Heretix lose their major label deals, the Cavedogs feared the future. "We were scared when Enigma went under," said Stevens. "We didn't know what was happening for a couple of months, so it was a very uneasy transition," replied Rivers. "But luckily, Capitol Records came through and rescued us."

Tours supporting the Charlatans UK, the Connells and the Replacements soon followed. "The Charlatans tour was great," commented Rivers sarcastically. "Those kids really know how to have fun. . . always having us in their dressing room, giving us gifts and bringing us up on stage. A lot of attitude goes along with that whole Manchester crap scene. Every single one of those songs sound exactly the same. I think the best tour we did was with the Replacements. We expected them to have the attitudes, but it turned out they were really nice guys."

With Soul Martini geared up and ready to be unleashed on America, the Cavedogs are looking forward to touring again. This time, however, the Cavedogs don't want to support anyone. "The idea of going back on the road on another tour opening up for someone isn't something we want to do," said Rivers. "If I wanted to see the Cavedogs, I wouldn't want to pay $18 to see us play a half hour set and then have to sit through the Charlatans. That'd be hell."

"If we had to support someone, I'd like to tour with the Replacements again. Either them or Husker Du, even though they broke up. I think Bob Mould would be good," said Spahr. "Bob Mould or Burt Bacharach," laughed Stevens. "It's almost frightening to say, but R.E.M. would be good for us." Stevens continued, "I think the Pixies would be a good tour, but they probably wouldn't want to tour with us because we aren't alternative enough. We have that 'pop' side, you know."

The possibility of a full tour seems bleak, however, because of the economy. "We've been hearing from promoters that this whole recession thing is making it impossible to go out on the road," commented Spahr. "The Channel just went under. That's an indication," added Rivers. "The Channel's just reacting to the recession in the Seventies," explained Stevens. "It never made the transition into an Eighties club back in the Seventies. So now that it's the Nineties, it's twenty years behind. But now that the Channel closed, there's nowhere for the revivals to play, like [Bachman Turner Overdrive]."

As history unfolds and evolution continues, it seems like man's fascination with technology and things that go 'ping' are leading him further into industrial, mechanized noise. The Cavedogs, on the other hand, are content with their guitar, bass and drums. Their hopes for the future are equally as simple. "I hope the Channel will reopen ten years from now so we can do a reunion tour," laughed Spahr, "except that we'll be bigger and fatter than any other band. Sort of like BTO."

SHAMEN COMES UP SHORT

by David Daley

Solid Gold came to Venus De Milo on Sunday, Feb. 9.

Yes, the television show has been off the air for years, and no, Marilyn McCoo was nowhere to be found. A British act called The Shamen were in town for their Boston debut, but the marquis could have dropped a few letters. A more appropriate billing would have been Sham or Shame. With few exceptions, the entire show was pre-recorded or computer sequenced.

The Shamen are currently a four-piece unit utilizing the power of cutting edge technology in their music, although their previous status as an independent guitar band had a major influence on bands like Jesus Jones and EMF. The death of bassist Will Sinnott last summer sent the band in a new direction, exploring the outer limits of dance, techno and house, but, in doing so, the Shamen have lost the musical bluster and lyrical edge of their previous life. And this was painfully obvious live, even though their maiden US record release, Entact (Sony) comes across as a generally solid effort.

In a concert setting, however, the focus is on the frontman and what he has to say. Lead singer Colin Angus, with his infantile white-boy rap, has nothing to say, rhyming lines something like, "If you want to be free / Just follow me" and "Come with me now / I'll show you how." Knowing this, the live presentation did everything possible to distract the audience from the show. Elaborate light and laser shows (to the point of sensory overload), however, are no alternative to real sound and substance. And many of the Shamen's newer, so-called dance tracks are either too slow and ambient to work live, or too long and redundant to stay interesting.

The Shamen are being hyped as the next big thing, the next alternative band to crossover into the mainstream, the next group of European musicians taking jobs and record sales away from good American bands. After seeing them live, only one question remains. Next?

REGGAE IN DIRE STRAITS

by Jannette Tucker

The Boston reggae scene is hurting. But not through a lack of talent or supply. In fact, there's an oversupply of reggae bands with no outlet for their music.

"Boston produces more reggae bands than any other city in the country," said Kyle Russell, co-owner of Roots on Newbury Street and soon-to-be publisher of The Rhythm Music Monthly, a magazine devoted solely to reggae, Caribbean, African and Latin American music.

"The problem," Russell continued, "is that there's more supply than demand."

Although he says that there's a huge scene in Dorchester, much of that reggae is unheard because no one crosses the border.

One woman who consistently crosses that border is Robin Walther who, along with Lisa Sherman, comprise "The Dynamic Duo." They "spin" for parties and host "Ragamuffin International" on WZBC 90.3 FM on Saturdays, from 1-5pm.

Walther explained that there is a very pronounced dichotomy in the reggae scenes of the Boston area.

"There are two scenes in Boston," she says. "The roots bands and the DJ dance hall. The DJ scene is in Dorchester and the band scene is in Cambridge (at the Western Front). But a lot of people don't want to go to Dorchester because it's far and out of their territory."

But if the Dorchester dance hall scene is hurting, the band scene back in Boston is in agony. There are only two places to go that have thriving reggae nights; The Western Front and Bill's Bar.

Russell, who plays bass for The Mighty Charge as well as Simba, says many musicians were saddened to hear of The Channel's closing, but reggae was hit particularly hard.

"The international acts used to go to The Channel," he said. "Now there's a vacuum created from that loss."

Walther and Russell agree on the one thing that would spruce up the reggae scene in Boston: "a really cool club."

"I think Boston clubs are having a problem opening up to anything other than disco," Walther said. "If we had one really cool club, we'd be all set."

"If I could change the scene in Boston, I would want at least one other club that did reggae exclusively," Russell said. "That's a must. And I would seriously consider having it in the Back Bay.

"There are people like me who really want it to happen," he continued, "but we're really struggling uphill."

QUEER IN AN ODD SENSE

by Rey Roldan

"At the moment, England is filled with bands with one syllable names like Curve, Ride, Moose and Lush," said Mark Cox of the tri-syllabic band the Wolfgang Press. "Their names blend into one another almost as easy as their music does." One thing for sure, this English trio does not fall into that sorry category. As one of 4AD Records' most commercial bands, the Press have evaded the trend-happy, European music scene and remain consistent by constantly changing their sound. "One thing that makes me happy is that we've always changed as we went along. We never want to repeat ourselves. Today, too many people fall into that trap. They get a sound and repeat it forever."

Cox and vocalist Mick Allen gave birth to this evolving band close to a decade ago and what it was back then is far from what it is today. Releasing three very different albums (all on 4AD Records) varying in tone and atmosphere, the Press have wandered the musical paths of Goth, pseudo-industrial and alternative dance. Their fourth album Queer (released late last year in the UK; a remixed Stateside release is slated for mid-April) softens the hard edges and cleans up the sound, bringing in some of the psychodelic dance that's still hanging around.

"We've always had a natural emphasis on rhythm and bass," explained Cox. "We've always done this kind of danceable music and I suppose this record is cut a little more in that direction than previous ones." However, an obstacle that the band may have to face especially in the US is the reception toward the album's title. "A lot of people see the word 'queer' as a slang for homosexual," replied Cox. "We aren't using it in that way, and if [the audience does], then it's their problem, not ours. We like the way the word looks and sounds, and people have applied that term to us for years. Besides, Q's look good."

Queer, oddly enough, may be Wolfgang Press' one way ticket to Mainstream, America. But Cox isn't worried about crossing over. "You can't have too many expectations in life," he replied. "If you put out something good, generally something good comes back. I think [Queer] is really good, so people in America should like it."

One Bostonian who has already felt the Press's pull is Leslie Langston, ex-Throwing Muses bassist who contributed on nearly every track on Queer. "We wanted her to be a permanent member of the Press, but she moved to San Francisco, got married and settled down. We were really happy that she was as involved as she was in the making of the record. Who knows? It may work out that she does some live dates with us."

Their tour later this spring will be perhaps the first with a full band. "In the past, we've toured with a tape machine. But last year, we found some really good people and rehearsed our new LP without sequencers and I felt so high," Cox said excitedly. "When we played our first date in a club, we really felt brilliant at the end of it because we determined when songs ended instead of being dictated by a tape. I have a really good feeling about this tour of the States."

With the strength of their new material and the electricity of a full band, the Wolfgang Press should have nothing to worry about Stateside. Perhaps this tour will decide once and for all, whether live is better than Memorex.

BARS & CLUBS

•33 DUNSTER STREET 354-0636, 33 Dunster St., Camb.. A restaurant/bar catering primarily to grad students and locals. A good place to procrastinate and chitchat with friends or to catch a bite on your way out to tackle the day's tasks. Open for late night dining. No cover. Casual atmosphere and dress. Drop in Sun. for the Jazz brunch.

•ALLEY CAT LOUNGE 451-6200, 1 Boylston Pl., Boston. Situated in the basement of the tropical dance club Zanzibar, this newcomer to the Boston bar scene is fast becoming a hit. The decor is brick with various Disney prints and the works of local artist Daniel Hejinian adorning the walls. The crowd is a mix of urban young professionals. Live bands on Wednesdays. Expect a short line, but its worth the wait. No cover.

•ALLSTON SPORTS DEPOT 783-2300, 353 Cambridge St., Allston. With 2 satellite dishes and over 20 TV sets, this may be the best place to catch a game outside of Fenway or the Garden. No cover and no dress code. Just a plethora of sports fans chatting- and arguing about, what else, sports - over beers, appetizers and killer burgers.

•AVALON 262-2424, 15 Lansdowne St., Bos.. Boogie to Hip Hop, Funk, House, Progressive and Top 40 music at this colossal dance club. Music varies nightly. Take advantage of the enormous dance floor, a placid lounge, and intimate booths. Avalon also boasts having the best light show in town. The crowd here is a good mix; anyone in the mood for dancing should feel comfortable. Cover charge varies but is fairly steep. Dressy slacks, collared shirts, and dark dress shoes required. Great place to see live shows. Sun. night is gay night..

Tue 25th.--The Cramps with the Reverend Horton Heat Tue 3rd.--Dinosaur Jr., My Bloody Valentine, Babes in Toyland

•AVENUE C 423-3832, 5 Boylston Pl., Bos.. A chichi dance club located in the Theatre District across from the Common. The crowd consists primarily of young professionals. The dress tends to be glitzy. Cover charge increases after 10 pm, so arrive early. No jeans or collarless shirts. Progressive music Fri. & Sat. nights.

•AVEROF 354-4500, 1924 Mass. Ave., Camb.. If you have a fetish for hommus or navels, this is the place for you. Located at Porter Sq., this casual Middle Eastern/Greek restaurant features live ethnic music and belly dancing nightly. The crowd is composed primarily of regulars, but everyone is welcome. No cover (except on special occasions) and no dress code.

•AXIS 262-2437, 13 Lansdowne St., Bos.. Axis spans 2 floors and is a progressive dance club with a primitive feel (lots of black). The crowd is mixed - everyone from pseudo-anarchists to college students. Moderate cover varies with the night. Creative dress suggested.

•BARMUDA TRIANGLE BAR 437-1011, 200 Brookline Ave., Boston. Probably the hottest new bar in Boston. It has live jazz all week long and the atmosphere is casual all the way.

•BEACON HILL PUB , 49 Charles St., Bos.. A scene straight out of Star Wars reads the Worst of Boston award hanging on the wall. Anything goes at this popular Beacon Hill dive bar. Inside you'll find upscale Beacon Hill professionals mixed with members of skid row (not the band, mind you). The crowd is friendly and unpretentious. Thur.-Sat. college students abound. When everyone gets together it's an interesting mix. No cover. Free wings and dogs 4-7pm weekdays.

•BELL IN HAND TAVERN 227-2098, 45 Union St., Bos.. Self-proclaimed the happiest tavern in Boston, this laid-back pub is frequented by a melange of tourists, Boston professionals, college students and locals. No cover. Casual dress. Juke box music and free munchies weekdays 5-7pm.

•BILL'S BAR , Lansdowne St., Boston. One of the hippest places around, Bill's is the epitome of a great bar-fun, loud, clean (but not meticulous), and showcases live music occasionally (on Tuesdays). A great place to get away from the dance clubs (although they're all next door). Casual and very relaxed.

•BLACK GOOSE 617-720-4500, 21 Beacon St., Boston. A relaxing club to sit and enjoy excellent live jazz at its best. It's casual and unassuming and you don't have to wear an 'I love jazz' attitude on your sleeve. There's never a cover and the atmosphere is great.

Wed 19th.--Doug Hammer Thur 20th.--Dave Jones Fri 21st.--Bill Conway Sat 22nd.--Jim Harkem Mon 24th.--Peter Golemme Tue 25th.--Scott Freeman Wed 26th.--Scott Freeman

•BLACK ROSE 742-2286, 160 State St., Bos.. Live Irish music 7 days and an atmosphere that thrives on patron participation characterize this Faneuil Hall bar whose name symbolizes Irish Catholic repression by the British. Traditional Irish music is served along with a host of Irish beers. Try the Guinness. Food is home spun. And remember, here, people will know your status by stealing a glance at your claddagh ring! If you want to mix with an upbeat crowd of students, professionals, locals etc. and get involved in the show, this is your bag. Moderate cover weekends. Casual dress.

Wed 19th.--Eugene Byrne and Co. to the 22th Fri 21st.--Celtic Clan tonight and tomorrow night Tue 25th.--Rich McDuff till the 29th Fri 28th.--Spike Island Tonight and Tomorrow night

•BOATHOUSE 491-6476, 56 JFK St., Camb.. This Harvard Sq. institution caters to Harvard students and recent grads. The small outdoor patio is fun in the summer. Inside it's nearly always crowded. No cover. Casual dress. Tell the bouncer that you're from Yale and get in for half price.

•BORDER CAFE 864-6100, 32 Church St., Camb.. If you're not in a hurry and crave Mexican food, or just margaritas, stop by the Boarder Cafe. Always crowded and noisy, its a favorite haunt of college students and young professionals. The walls are adorned with animal skulls and sombreros for that Southwestern feel. No cover. Casual dress.

•BOSTON BEACH CLUB 227-9660, 300 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. A strong seaside theme prevails. Surfboard tables, plastic sharks, tropical drinks and the guy next to you wearing a Hawaiian shirt adorned with a few dozen neon leis makes you feel like you've left Boston proper for the tropics. The crowd is young and the music often live. There is a small dance floor for those who like to bop.

•BOSTON BILLIARDS 536-POOL, 126 Brookline Ave., Bos.. Voted #1 billiard club in the nation in '91, this modern-day upscale pool hall has the comfortable feel of a living room. The crowd is a wide mix of ages and professions. Located just outside Kenmore Sq. Free pool lessons Mon. nights. Waiters bring drinks to your table. No cover. Casual dress.

Dennis Stein

by Jannette Tucker

If you're into that whole science thing, you'll eat (and drink!) the Miracle of Science bar and grill right up.

The ashtrays are petri dishes. The oil and vinegar for salads are served in flasks. Side sauces come in beakers. You sit on genuine lab stools at tables made of authentic heavy black lab-top material. A photo of Albert Eintstein rests among the liquors as a reminder of who the real King was.

But don't be too scared if you were the one dreading science classes and always forcing your friend to dissect your frogs. For you right-brain people, The Miracle of Science is not as intimidating as the name might suggest.

"I came up with the name six years ago," said Chris Lutes, who owns the bar with Matthew Curtis. "It was a catch phrase I came up with to explain the unexplainable. I always thought of myself as a scientist and swore if I ever opened something like this, I would use that name."

But Lutes cautioned that "we didn't want to overdo the science bit."

Comfort abounds, believe it or not, in this make-shift lab. Modern music plays at a peaceable level, giving way for lively conversation in a light atmosphere, sans science talk.

This small bar and grill (only 71 capacity) is conveniently located between MIT and Central Square. Large windows bring in lots of light during the day and offer nice "television" at night. Its proximity to MIT is misleading because it does not really lend itself to a college crowd as you see mostly people in their late- to mid-twenties or thirties. So if you're looking for a relaxed atmosphere and a fun place to kick back and hang out, set aside some time for Miracle of Science.

The draughts are mainly imports (Guinness, Harpoon, Harpoon Dark, Bass Ale, Anchorstean, and Coors Light), and they offer 14 different bottled beers. Their two specialty drinks are margaritas and Dark and Stormies (made with Goslings black label rum and Old Tyme ginger beer).

Lutes said the food choices are actually what attract a more sophisticated crowd.

And the menu is where this scientific hangout shines. Everything is homemade, right down to the salsa and the croutons on the salad. The menu, which is only printed on a wall-length chalkboard, is subject to change on any given day.

However, a few staples will always remain: there will always be hamburgers, chicken sandwiches and skewers but the arrangements will vary. Their standouts include homemade chili ($3 or $4.50), a bread and cheese plate with onion relish ($4.75), hummos with grilled pita bread ($2.75), tequila shrimp skewer ($7.50), vegetable skewers for you vegetarians ($5.00), dry rib beef with mustard aloli ($6.50) and homemade chocolate brownies for dessert ($1.75).

The Miracle of Science is located at 321 Mass. Ave. and is open Mon.-Sat. 11:30am to 1am, Sundays 2pm to 1am.

•THE CLADDAGH 262-9874, 335 Columbus Ave., Bos.. Under the same ownership as the Black Rose and Purple Shamrock, this quintessential Irish pub in the South End provides live music and fun decor without reeking of pretention or formality. Come as you are, and don't feel like you've got to impress anyone. Enjoy the varied music and join in a sing-a-long. No cover. Casual dress.

Wed 19th.--Every Wed. is Blues Night Fri 28th.--Patsy Whelan performs tonight and tomorrow night

•CLARKE'S 227-7800, 21 Merchant's Row, Bos.. Located just outside of Faneuil Hall, this is a popular meeting place for Boston singles and college students. Clarke's has that old-fashioned saloon appeal that makes it easier to let your guard down. Expect a line on weekends. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu in the restaurant.

•CLUB 3 623-6957, 608 Somerville Ave., Somerville. An established and much loved club that features local bands. Types of music vary like the weather. Mixed crowd depending on the draw of the particular band playing. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress.

Thur 27th.--Great Caesar's Ghost, The Reach, Citizen's Moorehead Fri 28th.--Tufts' WMFO Showcase Nite Sat 29th.--Living in Trees, Free Society, Urban Oasis

•CLUB M-80 254-2054, 969 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A New York/Euro-style club, complete with selective doormen. It's just a small room (actually part of the Paradise), but it attracts a good-sized crowd, good-lookers too. Music is usually DJ dance music, but occasionally live acts perform. Cover varies but is generally steep. The crowd is trendy so dress up; it will improve your chances.

•THE COFFEE BAR

731-5070, 213 Washington St., Brookline. You won't find any booze here but you can catch a buzz. The kind that comes from the freshly ground, potent beans of quality java. Its clean, well-lit atmosphere works miracles upon any groggy soul. Coffee is served in imported Italian ceramic mugs, each hand-painted. They're open 7:30am-8pm Mon-Fri and 10am-6pm Weekends.

•COMMONWEALTH BREWING COMPANY 523-8383, 138 Portland St., Bos.. Let no man thirst for the lack of real ale is the motto at this microbrewery and restaurant which features glass walls so thirsty patrons can longingly observe the brewing process. The decor consists of copper tables, pipes and beer tanks. Approximately 10 English ales are served on tap including Burton's Bitter served at 52 degrees. Commonwealth Brewing Company's proximity to the Boston Garden translates to before and after game crowds. Live bands play Sat. nights. Brewery tours are free, but sorry, this isn't the Molson factory. No samples.

•COPPERFIELD'S 247-8605, 98 Brookline Ave., Bos.. Traditionally a beer soaked college bar except after Sox's games when Copperfields attracts an avid sports crowd. Large crowds, Juke box, local live acts blaring Rock & Roll and a small dance floor liven the atmosphere. Basketball and video games too. Modest cover Thur.-Sat. Collared shirts are a must.

•COTTONWOOD CAFE 661-7440, 1815 Mass. Ave., Bos.. Open daily for lunch and dinner, this casual yet upscale cafe makes you feel like you've landed in the heart of Arizona. The southwestern cuisine (try the grilled specials) is complemented by the adobe booths and multitude of cacti. Relax in the outdoor cafe during the hot summer months.

•CRICKET'S 720-5570, 1015 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. Enjoy piano music and fresh air at one of Faneuil Hall's most visible bars. The atmosphere can provide a welcome respite from the bustle of people in the outside marketplace. The patio is covered by a greenhouse so there is no chance of being rained out. Or try the more traditional indoor section, decorated with wood and mirrors. No cover charge. Casual dress. A cappella singing Tue.-Thur. Live Jazz Sun.-Mon. The Brian Walkley Band performs three shows every Mon.

•DAD'S DINER 296-DADS, 911 Boylston St., Bos.. A restaurant on weekdays. A hopping 50's bar at night and on weekends. The crowd varies from collegiate to professional. No cover. Dress is casual.

•DAISY BUCHANAN'S 247-8516, 242 Newbury St., Bos.. This Newbury St. hot spot fills up consistently with singles and college students, not to mention sports fans. Dark and noisy. More action as the night subsides, this is the place to be for last call. No cover. Casual dress.

•DESTINATIONS 742-1212, 1 Congress St., Boston. Where else can you have a drink, catch a game and learn the waterways of Sumatra all at the same time? This upscale bar has probably one of the easiest methods of learning geographic trivia without having to crack open a map or encyclopedia. The dress code is on the neater side, so no jeans please.

•DIAMOND JIM'S PIANO BAR Lenox Hotel 536-5300, 65 Exeter St., Bos. A hotel piano bar with a relaxed atmosphere. Melt into an oversized lounge chair and absorb the music. The crowd runs the age gamut (from 21 to 60+). No cover. Dress varies from casual to business wear. Tue. night is Jazz night.

•DIVISION 16 353-0870, 955 Boylston St., Bos. This art deco police station is now a bar and restaurant. They serve monster portions of food. The crowd consists of students and young singles. It's a great place for a fun dinner, but save the romantic meals for a quieter place. No cover. Casual dress.

•DOCKSIDE 723-7050, 183 State St., Bos. A cozy sports bar not far from Faneuil Hall. The crowd is varied - from jocks and business people to singles. Large-screen TV for game viewing. Jukebox music. No cover. Casual dress. More than one Celtic has been spotted downstairs.

•ED BURKE'S 232-2191, 808 Huntington Ave., Bos.. This unassuming spot located at the foot of Mission Hill is where students, singles, and working people mix to the sounds of R&B, Rock, and Soul. Darts, pinball, and juke box music on weekdays. Bands on Thur. and weekends. Modest cover charge on band nights. Dress is casual.

Thur 20th.--Ray Greene and Universal Language Fri 21st.--Taylor Made Sat 22nd.--Treat Her Right Mon 24th.-- Thur 27th.--The Hustlers Fri 28th.--The Band that Time Forgot Sat 29th.--Big Blues Meanies with the Premiers

•EDIBLE REX 508-667-6393, 251 Old Concord Rd., Billerica. This club, whose logo is king of the dinosaurs, offers a variety of live music with 3 bands playing nightly Wed.-Sun. Rock & Roll is the standard, but Heavy Metal, Acoustic or Thrash can also be heard. Edibles offered. Modest cover varies. Air-conditioned clothing is required.

•ELIOT LOUNGE 262-1078, 370 Comm. Ave., Bos.. A sometimes rowdy and extremely preppy sports bar is known as the unofficial headquarters for the Boston Marathon. Dancing to DJ music on Sat. nights. Casual atmosphere that attracts all types. Modest cover on Sat. nights. No dress code. Their cafe serves American food, including pizza, burgers and sandwiches. Don't forget your alligator pants.

•FRED P. OTT'S 227-9373, 29 North Market St., Bos.. This definitive Faneuil Hall bar draws predominantly students and tourists. Dance to DJ music on weekends. Moderate cover Fri. and Sat. Casual dress. Arrive early to beat the line.

•FROGG LANE BAR & GRILL 720-0610, 245 Faneuil Hall Mktpl., Bos.. At this large Faneuil Hall patio bar, the crowd is a mix of tourists and locals. Lofted above the crowd in Faneuil Hall, Frogg Lane offers a mixed menu of American and Mexican fare that, when mixed with some beer, can be a dangerous combo if anyone is walking behind you. No cover or dress code. Jukebox for indoor entertainment.

•GREEN BRIAR 789-4100, 304-306 Washington St., Brighton. This neighborhood Irish pub in the heart of Washington Square has the best combination of the Celtic feel far from the parking mess of Government Center. Entertainment ranges from Irish music to the occasional progressive band. The crowd is a healthy mix of neighborhood folk and recent college graduates. Modest cover on weekends Casual dress.

Wed 19th.--Karaoke every Wed. Sun 23rd.--Every Sun. Is DJ Chris Mon 24th.--Irish Session happens every Mon.

•GRENDEL'S DEN 491-1050, 89 Winthrop St., Camb.. In this casual underground (literally) Harvard Sq. bar, you'll see a lot of maroon sweatshirts. Harvard students eat, drink and live here. Some have chosen to move here after graduation. But this establishment has a dark-paneled, German beer house feel and offers Cambridge Lager on tap. If you're not engaged in a philosophical debate, you can enjoy the free appetizers (weekdays 5-7pm). Upstairs offers a full Bavarian menu and has an ongoing fire in its oversized fireplace. No cover. No dress code.

•GROG (508) 465-8008, 13 Middle St., Newburyport. Rock, R&B and dance music is the entertainment Thur.-Sun. nights. The crowd and the ambiance at Grog is diversified. One can choose from 3 bars and a formal dining room. (Mexican, steaks, seafood and chowder) Cover varies. No dress code. Gargle a grog (their version of a hot toddy) come winter. The Peter Giftos Parker Wheeler Blues Party happens every Sun.

•GROVERS (508) 927-7121, 392 Cabot Street, Rte. 1A, Beverly. At Grovers, you'll merge with an eclectic crowd while listening to electrifying live music. Rock, Vocals, Blues. Moderate cover varies. Casual dress.

•HAMPSHIRE HOUSE 227-9600, 84 Beacon St., Bos.. An upscale piano bar with an active business clientele. The music runs the gamut from Jazz to Showtunes to Classical. No cover. The atmosphere is formal. A jacket and tie is requested of all male patrons.

•HARBOR CLUB 426-8600, 145 Northern Ave., Bos. This 2 floor, 6 bar club offers a sweeping view of the harbor and of Boston's spectacular skyline. Contemporary music with live Jazz Thur. Free buffet every Wed.- Fri. Also available for private functions. Valet parking. Free cover before 9pm. Proper dress. Suit jacket and tie required for male patrons.

•HARD ROCK CAFE 424-7625, 131 Clarendon St., Bos. Sure it's trendy and sure it's a tounsty, but where else can you watch people ooh-ing and aah-ing at a shrine devoted to Prince. Save any important and serious conversation for the ride home because, chances are, you won't be able to hear each other over the loud music anyway.

•HARPER'S FERRY 254-9743, 158 Brighton Ave., Allston. Perhaps Boston's best known R & B bar, Harpers offers live music nightly. Most of the bands are top local blues acts, but on Sun. the amateurs take over with open-mike night. Smoky but lots of fun with darts and billiards and a large dance floor. Moderate cover varies depending on the act. Collared shirts are required.

Wed 19th.--Open Mike Blues Jam hosted by the Rick Russell Band happens every Wed. •HONG KONG LOUNGE 864-5311, 1236 Mass. Ave., Camb.. Every college student should try bowling at the Hong Kong at least once. Look for pictures of friends on the walls. This is one place you'll need a designated driver for sure. No cover. Casual dress.

•HOULIHAN'S 367-6377, 60 State St., Bos.. A restaurant/bar at the edge of Faneuil Hall. Dancing to Top 40 DJ music every night. Typical downtown crowd - students, tourists, and young professionals. Frequently voted Best Singles bar by Best of Boston. Moderate cover Thur.-Sat. Dress is casual, but no jeans or sneakers after 7pm.

•HUB CLUB 338-6999, 533 Washington St. , Bos.. An eclectic 3-story dance club. Music ranges from Rap to Reggae but is mainly progressive. Cover varies from modest to heavy and increases after 11pm. Wed. nights 18+. Progressive dress Wed.-Fri. Proper dress Fri.-Sat. No sneakers.

•HUNTER'S FOOD AND SPIRITS 262-5551, 885 Boylston St., Bos.. An American pub with a small outdoor restaurant. It's a good place to get a solid bite to eat and a few drinks. On the pub side, the crowd is composed of singles, college students and tourists. Expect a small line on weekends and standing room unless sitting in a puddle of stale beer is your idea of a good time. No cover. Casual dress. Full menu.

•INDIGO 497-7200, 823 Main St., Camb.. This womens' night club can become rowdy after hours as women party and polish the floor to DJ house and dance pop tunes. Cover after 10:30pm so arrive early. No dress code.

•JACOB WIRTH'S 338-8586, 37 Stuart St., Bos.. Jacob Wirth has been serving hearty German fare since its doors opened in 1868 (superb sauerkraut). Its large beer hall is a great place to come to sample a wide array of beers including their own specially brewed dark beer. Sing-alongs to piano music on Fri. nights. Free parking with dinner.

•JILLIAN'S BILLIARDS 437-0300, 145 Ipswich St., Bos.. This nightclub caters to students and professionals alike who love to play. The Improper Tourist

The Improper Bostonian's Tips for the Out of Towner

by Jannette Tucker

Did you know that the Boston Public Library was the first free-lending library in the U.S.? Would you believe that "Old Ironsides" is actually made out of copper? Bostonians certainly know that most of Charlestown was burned down during the Battle of Bunker Hill. But who knows what the first thing was to be rebuilt?

Melanie Dunea

The Warren Tavern. After losing their homes and businesses, they all really needed a drink!

One need not comb the history books for these lessons. Classes are held every day of the year by the drivers of the Boston Trolley Tours.

Boston Trolley Tours (The Blue Trolley), open 365 days a year, narrate lively, and most importantly informative tours for tourists and Bostonians alike. No matter how much you think you know about this city, hop a trolley and you'll learn even more.

Every Bostonian might know that the building that houses Grill 23 and WMJX on Stuart St. was the original Salada Tea building. But do you know that Salada invented the pre-prepared tea bags in that very building? This is important stuff.

The fun doesn't stop there. These trolley tour drivers know everything. They even know the best views in town. Take a drive over to the corner of Stuart and Clarendon streets and look over your shoulder at the John Hancock building. As you glance back, you'll be overwhelmed by the view of theTrinity Church reflection glowing in the glass. Quite impressive!

Getting down to more serious matters, the trolley takes you back in time to 1942 when the imfamous Coconut Grove fire killed about 500 people. But that fire could have been even more devastating. The day it took place, Boston College played Holy Cross in football. BC, being rather sure of themselves, made 2,000 reservations for a victory party at the Coconut Grove. They lost 52-12 and subsequently cancelled all reservations. Fortunately for them, their poor playing saved their lives! Ironically, the post-game party flyers featured the two BC co-captains. The numbers on their jerseys were 52 and 12.

Here's a sample of some more lesser-known historical facts from Boston Trolley Tours:

• Paine Furniture is the oldest furniture store in the country. And if you promise to spend at least $10,000, they'll close the store for you and let you shop in peace.

• The New England School of Law is the first chartered law school that admitted women.

• The Stock Exchange Building is designed to look like a bar graph on the stock exchange and changes as you move.

•There are only two working guns on the U.S.S. Constitution. When the ship fires their annual July 4th, 21-gun salute, they're alternating these two relics.

• The Boston Garden is the largest indoor sports arena without air conditioning.

• The Parker House Hotel used to employ Malcom X.

• Tremont Temple Baptist Church is the first church in the U.S. to allow blacks and whites to sit together.

• Newbury Street generates $1.5 million a year in parking tickets and is patrolled by eight full-time meter maids. The City of Boston generates $51 million a year in parking tickets.

• Mass. General was the first hospital to use ether as an anesthetic. The room where it was used is open to the public.

• The purple windows on some apartments on Beacon Street are the result of a defect. A shipment of glass came over from England and, years after they were installed, were found to be defective. Being in the sun turned them purple.

To find out more fun stuff, hop a trolley and learn more about this city than you ever thought you'd know.

Walking the Other Freedom Trail

by Gary S. Kadet

"Mark my prediction: Faneuil Hall shall ere long echo with principles we have set forth."
William Lloyd Garrison.

One of the most improper Bostonians of all time was firebrand editor William Lloyd Garrison, who founded the New England Anti-Slavery Society on Beacon Hill well before the outbreak of the Civil War. As this is Black History Month, a good way to commemorate it might be to follow Garrison's footsteps by walking the "Black Heritage Trail," a pivotal part of the 11-year old Boston African American Historic Site.

The trail comprises 15 sites along 1.6 miles of winding streets and alleyways. It was conceived over a decade ago by Sue Baily Thurman and further refined by Marcus and Gaunzetta L. Mitchell. Rep. Byron Rushing, who was instrumental in the founding of the Historic Site, also wrote the brochure that is still used on the walking tour. Beacon Hill may be the province of Yuppies and holdout Brahmins, but between 1800 and 1900, the city's black population was centered in the old West End (now Charles River Park), between Pinckney and Cambridge as well as Joy and Charles streets. Because of this, the Black Heritage Trail runs a circuit of Beacon Hill, paralleling the worn red line of the Freedom Trail.

The tour starts at the African Meeting House at 8 Smith Court at the top of Joy Street, the oldest black church building in the United States and which used to be known as the Black Faneuil Hall. It continues to the Smith Court residences, five buildings that served as homes for such black community luminaries as William C. Nell, America's first black historian and school integrationist. Joseph Scarlett, a former chimney sweep who died owning 15 parcels of Boston real estate, also lived there. Next is the Abiel Smith School, a black school that grew out of the meeting house that was also the center of the first school integration suit brought against the city in 1848. The school is now home to the Museum of Afro American History- a spot worth visiting on its own.

Melanie Dunea

Other highlights include the Charles Street Meeting House, the sight of the old Tremont Temple (the first integrated church in America) and Coburn's Gaming House, the black-owned resort of the "upper ten" who had acquired a taste for gambling, where the trail ends.

Something that might strike a chord with moviegoers is the often ignored Shaw Memorial across from the State House on Beacon St., a relief sculptured by August Sainte-Gaudens, whose work adorns much of the Boston Public Library. The memorial is a tribute to Hill resident Col. Robert Gould Shaw and the otherwise all-black Massachusetts 54th Infantry, that he led against the south during the civil war. Shaw and his regiment were the subject of the acclaimed 1990 film, "Glory."

In a town that welcomed the Fugitive Slave Law of 1850, fought bussing and made a short lived hero out of Charles Stewart, it's a good idea to walk this trail to see how far a vibrant community has come- and how far it still has to go.

For information about tour scheduling, contact the Museum of African American History at (617) 742-1854 or the National Parks Service at (617) 742-5415.

Monica, marriage isn't anything, really. So he ran off with the cruise director on your honeymoon, hey how about that buffet though!. But if you're really obsessed with finding a man, let me recommend my therapist, he's really great. . . if you know what I mean and he is also petrified of sailing. Let me suggest not to fly though, he has a fetish for air waitresses.

Mark Twain once wrote, "God surely must love poor people; that's why he made so many of them," but I don't think the same principle applies to lawyers.

The Lore of St. Patrick's Day

. . . Where to Spend Your Green

Making Sense of Nunsense

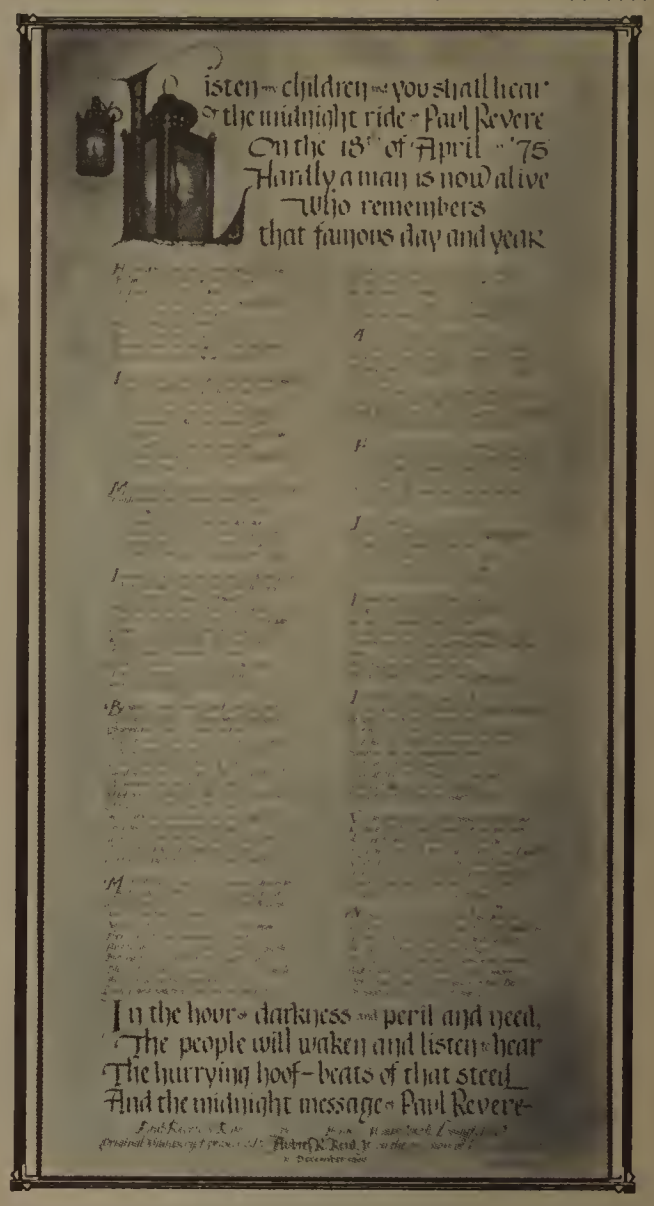
Mopsy Strange Kennedy

Bristling With Delight

The English architect who designed this toothbrush said of the usual small variety "You just can't grip the little swine." The Radius, on the other hand, with its tilted, round-the-bend shape and its cozy giant thumbprint longs to be grabbed, and grabbed by the appropriate hand. These are the only ones sold in both left- and right-handed brushes. And the soft, inviting bristles fill the land of the teeth like a veritable pigmy hairbrush; once in place the natural direction of brushing takes the Radius from side to side, not up and down. The smooshing of the 5,500 bristles - the finest of any available toothbrush at one-thousandth of an inch each - works the action into the small spaces under the gums where the bad news lurks. When you start brushing with this comfy and oddly inviting implement, your gums may bleed a bit. Once acclimatized, though, it's easy to keep foxtrotting the Radius back and forth for the recommended three minutes, covering the whole teeth and gum area in a lightly woofling action. Chic enough for design-minded grownups, the brush is also fun enough for kids. And; though it costs approximately $10.50, it lasts about three times as long as most brushes (hence it really "costs" about $3.) "We're going to have to build in some obsolescence," sighs its designer.



Toys R Us, Colonial Drug, 49 Brattle Street, Cambridge; Huron Drug, 359 Huron Avenue, Cambridge.

Hair of the God

This is the kind of hair salon that out of town rags - Vogue and Elle - discover and put on the map, again and again. Its distinctive gimmick, beyond the actual coifs fomented here, is a series of giant-sized, floor to ceiling portraits - plummy and mournful in feeling - of rock stars who have died. Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin, the recently deceased Freddie Mercury, John Lennon, Stevie Ray Vaughn, and Jim Morrison approach the stature - and certainly the scale - of Egyptian deities. One ironic twist has the gigantic liquid lips of the still-living Steve (Aerosmith) Tyler gracing the Morrison portrait. The rock 'n roll hair version of the art features, at times, a "Loose look that falls and flies, maybe a little in the face," as Creative Director Jodie Branco puts it. Or put up and tumbling down in teasing tendrils of escaped hair. Not an aggressive "chop-shop," as the client's wishes are respected the most. The feeling here is not so aggressively chic that you feel you have to be Cher to come here, but it's certainly not staid either. The stylists are young and friendly. "Casual, not grungy, maybe wearing a baseball cap. They can get down," says Branco. The unintimidating clientele (this being Newbury Street) occupy the wide-band range of people who would know and revere the gods of rock who stare down from the walls. Putting their social conscience money where their mouth is, Branca and Elvis, (this one really is alive) give a donation to Walden Woods Project and the AIDS Action Committee from each haircut, 'do, or dye.

Born 2B Wild Hair Salon, 116 Newbury Street, Boston 02116. 536-0303.

Yon Descript Calligrapher

How do I love thee, calligraphically? Let me count the ways. Actually, it's the fine flourishing pen of Maria Thomas who does the inscribing, giving a tender, romantic and very classy look to whoever wants this particular touch of everlastingness. Her menu for the Victorian - an Inn in Whitinsville Mass. with its Gothically ornate lettering and its evocative tumbling roses, and lightness of lettering touch - gives a taste of the tastes to come. Never standardized, her invitations, poems, sayings, plaques, and diploma-like remembrances of things that last plumb new lettering styles, always have that sprig of ornament - a tight purple foxglove, a rose, berried ivy or even a graceful illustration such as a sepia, trumpet-blowing angel or a brandy-colored cherub. Thomas's lettering on wedding invitations makes a graceful keepsake, in which even the zipcode looks like art. One client has employed her services to make small plaques over the years; for a pregnant friend in the candy business who wanted a girl, but got a boy, Thomas wrote "Boys are chocolate too" over a scene of tobogganing lads bearing a turn of the century feeling. Other times, transient jokes and inspirations have wanted to be pinned down to earth by her pen. She has even made 800 rose-bedecked placecards for Rose Kennedy's 100th birthday. Not surprisingly, her work has been featured in that magazine of ultimate romantic lusciousness, Victoria.
